NASSER'S NEW TUNE: DON'T ATTACK ISRAEL!

London, (CJN) — A shock awaited the "Palestine Experts" of the Arab League countries this week as they prepared to leave for Cairo to resume discussion of "the threat from Israel." Before them was the full text of a speech delivered a few days earlier by President Nasser to a visiting delegation from Gaza. The Egyptian Press had reported it only in part. The Arab League delegates had to contend with nothing less than advice from the Egyptian President that they put aside all thoughts of an early and decisive military victory over Israel. At the last minute the "Experts" called off their conference.

"He who wants to win a battle must prepare for it," Nasser declared. "He who is not sure of victory, but tries to make the people believe that victory is near, is a traitor," he warned. With startling frankness Nasser commented: "I can impose my views on myself, but can I impose them on Ben-Gurion, too? When I make a decision I must be confident that I can impose my views on my forces and that I can impose my forces on Ben-Gurion and those behind him."

Palestine, he declared, was the most difficult problem in the world. "He who claims that he has made plans for solving this question is just laughing at you. I am not telling you that I have a plan."

Anyone who today says that he has a plan for the liberation of Palestine is mocking you."

NEW WEAPON: REALISM

Here was Nasser hitting back with an unusual weapon — realism. He was replying to the Syrian Ba'ath leader Akram Haurani, who has been taunting him these past few weeks with failure to stop the Israelis using the Gulf of Akaba. He was getting at Prime Minister Knesset of Israel, who has boasted of plans for Palestine's liberation. He was having a smack at King Hussein of Jordan, who claims the leadership of Palestine's Arabs. But he was also spelling out some hard facts for all the Arab peoples.

There was even harsher advice for the Gaza Arabs themselves. Certainly the Egyptians would back them when the day came to restore Arab rights in Palestine, but they had to do something about organising themselves first. "You say that you want to rebuild the Palestinian entity," Nasser noted. "Well, then, you must travel to every country where there are Palestinians and contact them." But, while preparing themselves for the battle against the Jews, what about living conditions in the Gaza Strip itself? "Do not count on the U.N. Relief and Works Agency," Nasser warned. "One day that relief will end."

SOMETHING WRONG

This was the voice of a different Nasser from the one to whom Middle East Arabs have become accustomed. But the same voice can speak in two accents. This week the National Congress of the United Arab Republic adopted the Charter which is intended to guide the country along the path of "Arab Socialism" to a glorious future. But its first aim, as stated by the Presidential spokesman, is "the liberation of Palestine from the usurper and the liquidation of imperialism." The new Egyptian budget was also published this week, revealing a record defence and security appropriation of £138 million. Nasser did not say that the fight with Israel was off: only that the Arabs had to be prepared.

But the week was not without its major shock for the Egyptian President himself. He learned that his multi-million pound Aswan High Dam, destined to bring power and water to large areas of arid land, was in danger of partial disintegration, if not of collapse. An independent report prepared for him by non-Russian experts said that a great deal of underpinning would be needed to ensure that the foundations did not crumble away. There were angry messages to the Soviet Union, whose engineers are responsible for the result was that the Russians withdrew their chief expert at Aswan, Professor Komzin, and replaced him with another one, Alexander Alexandrov. And the Egyptian Finance Minister, in an urgent message to Moscow, suggested that it would be as well if someone in authority were to come to find out for himself what had gone wrong. The Russians agreed. Anastas Mikoyan, first deputy to Mr. Khrushchev, is due in Cairo within the next few weeks. (Copyright by The Canadian Jewish News & JCNFS)

BONN, PARIS TO HELI

20,000 JEWS LEFT IN ALGERIA

JERUSALEM (JCNS) — The State of Israel has officially recognized the independence of Algeria it was announced here on Sunday following a cabinet meeting.

This step is one in the direction indicated recently by Mrs. Golda Meir, in her address to the Knesset (parliament) appealed for close relations with independent Algeria. She stated that such relations would be of benefit to both parties and should be established along the lines that exist between Israel and other new Afro-Asian nations.

SPECIAL "JOINT" OFFICE

A report from Vienna relates that the Joint Distribution Committee established a special office in Algiers to provide relief and other social welfare services to the remaining Jews in need.

(According to the latest figures only about twenty thousand Jews are left in Algeria. Between 100,000 and 120,000 are reported to have escaped to France.)

Mr. Charles Jordan, Director General of the American Joint Distribution Committee made a statement in Vienna about the new activities of J.D.C. in Algeria. He said:

"The new office of the 'Joint' has been set up in the deserted Jewish Maimonides College in Algiers. It will share the building with the H.I.A.S. representative.

Mr. Jordan stated that "no matter how few are left we must devote ourselves to taking care of the aged, the invalids, and the children who are unable to take care of themselves. There is no Jewish community leadership left in Algeria," he concluded, "except two heroic rabbis who stayed on to look after their flocks."

DE GAULLE, ADENAUER FOR JERUSALEM ROLE IN E.C.M.

Paris, (JCNS) — Chancellor Konrad Adenauer, the West German Chancellor, last week sent a confidential message to Israel's Prime Minister, David Ben-Gurion. Dr. Adenauer himself revealed the news about the message when talking to your correspondent here at the German Embassy.

I interviewed the aging Chancellor during the reception given in his honour by the West German Ambassador, Dr. Blankenhorn. The leader of Germany told me that his message to the Israeli Premier is related to the problem of having Israel join "in some form" the European Common Market organization. At this occasion Dr. Adenauer praised Ben-Gurion and said that during their meeting last year in New York Mr. Ben-Gurion impressed him "very deeply."

CONFER ABOUT ISRAEL

I also learned from reliable sources that the problem of Israel's relations with the Common Market came up for brief discussion during the talks between President Charles de Gaulle and Dr. Konrad Adenauer. The German and French leaders conferred here last week.

Both leaders who are most influential in the Common Market seem to share the views that a solution be found to free Israel from the threat of financial economic strangulation should she be left out of the Common Market.

ISRAEL ASKS 'SIX' FOR 'ALL-IN' PACT

Brussels, (CJN) — M. Jean Rey, Vice-President of the Common Market's Executive Commission, gave a report to the Six's Council of Ministers on recent discussions between the Commission and Israeli representatives, sources close to the Council said here yesterday.

The report confirmed that Israeli representatives had proposed that a comprehensive trading agreement should be signed by Israel and the Common Market, the sources said. In return, Israel would agree to contribute to the Six's aid to associated African countries, they added.

According to the sources, the Commission will prepare a full report on the talks which will be discussed by the Council of Ministers during their next meeting, at the end of July.

B. G. STAFF MEET ON EMERGENCY

Jerusalem, (JCNS) — Premier David Ben-Gurion met the Israel Army Chief of Staff, General Zvi Tsur. They are said to have discussed the situation which developed on the border with Jordan following the incident in which two Israeli soldiers were killed and three wounded when the Jordanians opened fire at Abu Tor. The Israel-Jordan Mixed Commission meet again today.

Armistice Commission will meet this afternoon for a third time in Jerusalem. Two emergency meetings were held yesterday at which the Jordanians made counter complaints alleging that the Israelis shot at Arab Legion positions in the Old City. U.N. Observers are expected to complete their investigation by the time the London, (JCNS) — "The first step towards the creation of conditions for an Arab-Israeli peace settlement" should be Israel's return to a policy of non-identification which she had abandoned 12 years ago. This was stated by Mr. Richard Crossman, M.P. when addressing a Mappam Forum here.

It had been against the advice of the President, Professor Chaim Weizmann, that the Israeli Government had sided so completely with the West during the outbreak of the Korean war, in 1950. He stated: "It was a decisive step," its consequent advantages in the military sphere, as well as financially, had been far outweighed by the negative psychological and political effects which it had had both on the relations with the Arab neighbours, and on the very concept and nature of the Jewish State itself.

"Had Israel, like the Arab States, remained uncommitted to either of the power blocs, West or East, no one could of course assert with certainty that the hostility between the Jews and the Arabs would have come to an end; but there would at least have been common ground between them on the basis of keeping the Middle East out of the cold war," Mr. Crossman argued.

Prof. Martin Buber and several other professors, dealing with the danger of the introduction of nuclear armament to the Middle East zone.)

An Embassy spokesman, asked about the story, recalled that Prime Minister Ben-Gurion had called similar reports in December 1960 "either a deliberate or unconscious untruth."

What Mr. Ben-Gurion said then still stands, the spokesman said and added: "There has been no change in the situation."

State Department officials said they had no reason to change the position they took in December, 1960, when the Department stated construction of Israel's nuclear reactor "does not represent a cause for special concern."

England moves against Nazis

MAY PROSECUTE NAZI SPEAKERS

London, (JCNS) — Legal proceedings are being considered by the Government against the speakers at the British National Socialist Movement anti-Jewish meeting at Trafalgar Square on Sunday.

This was announced in the House of Commons by the Home Secretary, Mr. R. A. Butler, who commented that these speakers might be regarded as the most provocative people at the meeting.

Mr. Butler condemned "the abuse of free speech" and hinted that in future the police might act more strictly in dealing with meetings of this kind.

He deplored the disorder which occurred on this occasion, and even more the obnoxious doctrines expressed, he declared Mr. Butler. "The police dealt firmly with the situation and I believe existing powers to be adequate."

"We must not put ourselves in a position of lightly restricting free speech. However, I wish to make it quite clear that we shall not tolerate the provocation of disorder by the abuse of free speech." He promised to watch the position with care and to consider any representations which M.P.s might wish to make to him.

"TOLERATING INTOLERANCE"

Commenting upon the Home Secretary's statement to Parliament, the London Jewish Chronicle will state editorially on Friday:

"Mr. Butler's statement in the House of Commons on Tuesday last Sunday's 'Nazi' meeting at Trafalgar Square, was perhaps too balanced, and subsequent debate indicated that members on both sides of the House considered that the events called for stronger denunciation and remedial measures than the tenor of the statement indicated. There will, however, be satisfaction at the intimation that legal proceedings are envisaged against these purveyors of hate. It is altogether absurd that those who are regrettably but understandably incited to violence by unbearable provocation should be prosecuted while the instigators not only go scot free but even receive police protection.

"The authorities must accept full responsibility for last Sunday's disorders in Trafalgar Square. Repeated representations had been made in advance of the rally by members of Parliament and others who urged the Government to refuse to an insignificant fascist group the facilities of London's traditional meeting place.

"The advocates of these nauseating doctrines command scant support; the listeners in the Square were overwhelmingly hostile to the speakers, and there is no evidence that even the hard core of supporters amounts to more than a few dozen misfits. But we know from bitter experience that lies which are big enough and repeated often enough do sink in and that those who have grievances against society can often be made to believe that their troubles are all due to the Jews. There remains some doubt whether the authorities appreciate the extent of their responsibility in these matters. This doubt will only be removed when there is evidence that the Government will act promptly and firmly to limit the activities of these bigots and not only after further damage has been done."

CANADIAN COMPANY GETS ISRAELI OIL CONCESSION

HAIFA, Israel, (CJN) — A search for offshore oil is now under way along the Mediterranean coast of Israel. A Canadian survey company, Sanana Ltd., has been charged by the Government with conducting a survey on the continental shelf which covers about 2,000 sq. kms.

The Canadian firm, owned by Mr. Gordon L. Hirschhorn, has set up a subsidiary, Petrocana Ltd., which has adapted the fishing trawler "Sunat" for the oil search and installed on it about three tons of modern geophysical equipment. Most of the experts come from Houston, Texas, but most of the technicians are Israelis. The survey was started some ten days ago.

A spokesman for the Petrocana Co. stated that if no oil bearing strata are found, the cost of the survey would be borne by the company, yet the data would be put at the disposal of the Defence Forces.

Negotiations between the Government and the Sanana Co. started in November 1960 and the contract was signed last year. The Petrocana Co. invests its own funds and has sought no loan from the Government. "The initial financing of the Petrocana project has generated completely new investments for Israel, and non-Jewish as well as Jewish investors in both Canada and the U.S. are participating," the spokesman stated.

By international convention, the rights of Israel, as of any maritime nation, to the exploitation of offshore resources extend not only to the limit of its territorial waters, but to all the land beneath the sea to a water depth of 200 metres. For Israel, this continental shelf covers an area equal to nearly ten per cent of its land area.

MOSCOW YESHIVA STUDENTS MISSING

London, (JCNS) — There are now reported to be only four students attending the regular courses at the Moscow Yeshiva.

The sudden reduction in the number of students — up to Passover there were twelve — is believed to be due to the difficulties experienced by eight of them living in Georgia and other places remote from Moscow in obtaining the necessary permits required for a stay in the capital.

end of maghreb

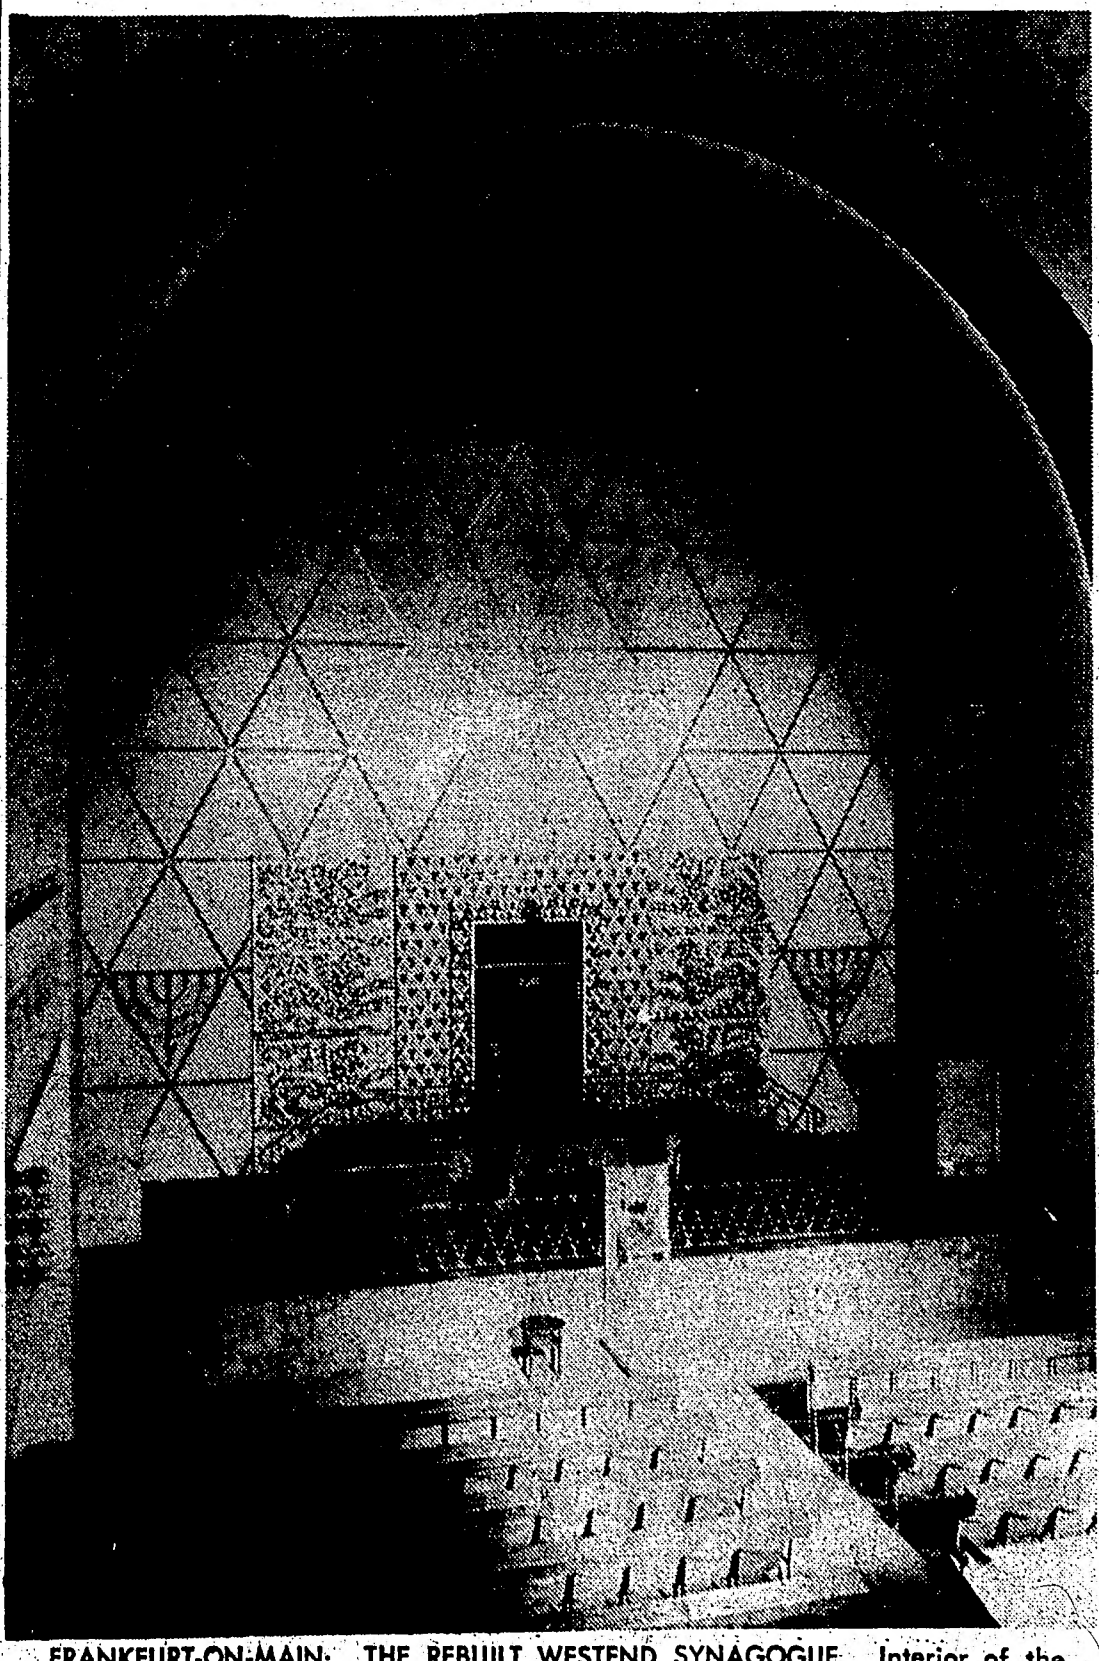

We live in a period of history when demographic changes are completely altering the Jewish map. In simple, unadulterated Zionist language, ours is the era of liquidation of many centers of Exile. What is occurring now in the Maghreb (the North African Moslem West) is nothing else but the liquidation of a Galut center. It immediately followed the destruction of Jewish community life in the North African Arab East. Furthermore, the dissolution of Jewish communities in North-East Africa was preceded by the calamity which erased Central European Jewry, west of the Soviet Union. It is important to stress these lessons of modern Jewish history; nay, it is imperative, since Jews are very clever individually but less so as a group.

When I visited North Africa a decade ago, the approximately one-hundred-fifty-thousand Algerian Jews ignored the trend from the East. They did not feel less secure as Frenchmen than do North American Jews as North Americans. Algerian Jews were citizens of France while, at the same time, they "belonged" to Algeria — for no less than two-thousand years. Jewish communities flourished in Algeria long before Islam was born; centuries before the Arab conquest of that part of North Africa. In their majority, Algerian Jews also belonged to the westernized "French" community. According to Andre Chouraqui, a historian of North African Jewry, Algerian Jews supplied about twenty-five per cent of Algeria's dentists, about twenty-five per cent of its physicians, close to twenty per cent of its lawyers and twenty per cent of the employees of the French administration ten years ago. Now it seems that, of the close to 150,000 Algerian Jews, but 30,000 remain.

The picture is similar in Morocco, Tunisia — and east of the Maghreb (Libya and Egypt). North African Jewry — which had written in the past such glorious chapters in the eternal annals of our people, in its literature, in its religious culture — is all but gone.

Some may insist all this is "tied up" with Israel. Were there no Jewish state in Israel, they claim, both Arabs and Jews alike would live peacefully. This too is a perversion of historic truth. In 1945, there was no Jewish state; merely the bitter aftermath of the war remained. The Italian Fascist regime had just been liquidated in Tripolitania. The Arabs celebrated their new freedom by vicious anti-Jewish pogroms. Then the Tripoli Jews began the liquidation of their Galut. Jews throughout North Africa never forgot that lesson. They know now that the natives always considered them strangers, a part of the foreign regime — for they are not Moslems.

The Libyan pogroms were repeated in 1948. The fact is, the new nationalism in North Africa, as in all countries with a primitive population, is xenophobic. Many years will pass before it is learned that freedom does not mean the right to oppress, kill or rob. The Jews of North Africa cannot wait for that day. Hence their ancient communities are liquidated. Jewish demography is changing before our eyes. As for us in the free world, do we respond to this call of Jewish history?

TORONTO SYNAGOGUE NEWS

PROBLEMS OF JEWISH EDUCATION

By JOSEPH LEVINE

The following article is a digest of Mr. Levine's remarks at the recent dinner of Toronto's Associated Hebrew Schools. Mr. Levine is president of "Associated".

We are all aware of the rapid expansion which has taken place in Jewish education in recent years. Enrolment in Jewish schools has increased relatively faster than the actual growth of the Jewish population.

More money is being spent on Jewish education, although somehow the money supply never quite seems to catch up with the need.

Those of us who are close to the "Associated" are justifiably proud of its amazing growth in recent years. The original number of pupils of the Brunswick Ave. Talmud Torah has grown and doubled, and tripled, and grown some more until now we count close to 2500 in our schools. We have many and varied departments in our school, the Nurseries and Kindergartens, Day School and Junior High, and in the afternoon we have in addition to the original Brunswick Talmud Torah, large schools such as Shaarei Shomayim, North Bathurst and Beth Emeth.

We believe this expansion has been a healthy type of growth, because it has added to stability in the community, it has been a counter influence to the divisiveness which not only leads to disunity, but is also costly and harmful from the communal point of view, and which does not lend itself to sound educational planning or efficient administration.

I might add, that while in some instances elsewhere rapid growth was also accompanied by features which diminished the effectiveness of the week-day schools and generally tended to lower educational standards, we at Associated have never at any time been prepared to compromise on the question of standards, or to sacrifice quality for quantity.

Associated today claims with good reason to be the largest school on the North American continent. Our Day School and Junior High have an enrolment of 1200 pupils and we are proud of their scholastic achievements. We are also participating in the development of the Senior Community Day High School, which we fervently hope will be successful. This too is a significant and historical development in Jewish education for our community.

But just as much as the Day School speaks volumes for our determination to maintain the highest educational standards, so does the fact that we have more than a 1000 children in our afternoon schools, attending five days a week, getting ten hours of instruction per week. This at a time when in other communities such maximal program afternoon schools have greatly diminished in numbers or vanished altogether.

We remain true to the ideals of the founders of this school who set out to provide the best education for the children in our community. We have refused to water down our program, or cut our hours. I believe that this action on our part has met with the approval of the community who continue to send us their children in ever increasing numbers.

Our financial responsibilities and problems have certainly kept pace with our physical growth. Everyone knows that education is not financially self-sustaining. Any one in this audience who pays municipal taxes knows how tremendously have risen the costs of general education. But our municipalities have a very practical solution. They simply keep raising taxes year after year in order to meet the rising costs of elementary and Secondary education.

Unfortunately we have no taxing powers and depend on the good will of parents and the community. Our annual budget now exceeds three-quarters of a million dollars. Our income from tuition fees last year was $488,000. Our subsidy from the Bureau of Jewish Education was $144,000. Other income amounted to $34,000. Because of the inadequate source of income for maintenance and some capital costs, we have accumulated over the past several years a current and capital deficit of some $350,000. To a government agency this may be a small sum. To an institution like ours it is a serious problem.

As in the past, we are counting on the good will and warm support of the community, to help us overcome our difficulties. To be very specific, the destiny of this institution is literally in the Jewish community. I believe it is in good hands.

WURZBURGER WARNS AGAINST CLASS RELIGION

Miami, Florida, (CJN) — Speaking on July 8th, at the conference of the Rabbinical Council of America, held here, Rabbi Dr. Walter S. Wurzbarger, Vice-President of the Rabbinical Council of America, and Editor of "Tradition", said:

"The spiritual crisis of our time calls for the deepening of religious thought rather than the strengthening of religious organization. Religious revival based upon emotionalism, gimmicks, or promotions stunts are merely short-lived bubbles floating in the air, that burst upon contact with the substantive issues facing us. "Religion must not be a middle-class status symbol, but must make an all-out effort to reach the intellectual leaders of our time."

TEHERAN REPORTS

Children Aided

THIS IMPORTANT NEW DEVELOPMENT IN THE CARE OF JEWISH CHILDREN IN TEHERAN IS SUPPORTED BY THE UNITED JEWISH APPEAL OF TORONTO THROUGH THE UNITED JEWISH RELIEF AGENCIES. — EDITORS

TEHERAN — "Our class for slow-learning children is coming along beautifully. . . the two teachers show an insight I never would have thought possible. . . the problems of family relationships are staggering. . ."

These are some of the notes the Joint Distribution Committee's day-care consultant, Evelyn Peters, of Milwaukee, made in her day-book concerning the first pre-school class for retarded children to be opened in Teheran, a class she helped organize, for which she trained teachers and which she is now supervising. The class consists of 11 children from underprivileged Jewish families in Teheran, capital city of Iran.

The new class is housed in one of Teheran's two Jewish day-care centres in the mahalleh, the city's old Jewish quarter, and is sponsored jointly by the Ladies' Committee of the Teheran Jewish Community, JDC (with United Jewish Appeal funds), and the Central Relief Fund, which has made a special grant for it. A pilot project for the whole of Iran, it is part of the modern day-care program for underprivileged Jewish children which the Ladies' Committee in Teheran, with JDC's assistance has developed over the past five years. The program now cares for 1,400 children in the 3-to-6 year age group in Teheran and other Iranian cities.

Miss Peters, who helped develop the first project for mentally retarded pre-school children in the University of Illinois, writes about this new class: "The two young teachers are doing an excellent job. They meet once a week with the consultant and the social worker and their notes are quite good, even sophisticated, considering their limited educational background and the shortness of the six-week intensive training course they received prior to taking on this specialized work. "The atmosphere in the class is completely relaxed; the relationship with the children is warm, friendly and completely professional. Here are teachers instantly picking up cues from the environment, and integrating them into a program which meets each child's needs. There is just the right amount of freedom tempered with routine. The amount of self-help the teachers are encouraging is astonishing."

There are no testing facilities currently available and the teachers must rely on other sources such as complete physical examinations with case histories, and a thorough study of each home and family situation. "The JDC Medical Department is being extremely helpful on this," Miss Peters said.

The class is serving as an excellent training ground for students of the Teheran School of Social Work, Miss Peters says. She writes: "A second-year student has been assigned to the class along with two first-year students to assist her. An American social worker is supervising her work. Also, a psychologist obtained through the School for Social Work is trying to ascertain the mental age of the children."

"The problems of family relationship are overwhelming and the social worker and her supervisor are stunned by the problems coming to light," Miss Peters says. "There are some definite indications, in fact, that some of the children may not be suffering from deficient intelligence but rather from emotional blocks to learning caused by extremely complex family problems."

The class clearly answers a long-felt need, Miss Peters said. "However," she added, "one can see the question loom large in June when four of the children now in the special class will reach the age of eight: Where do we go from here?"

STUDENT PILGRIMS RECEIVED AT TORONTO'S CONSULATE

High School students from various parts of the country who will be visiting Israel this summer were received officially at the Israeli Consulate on Friday, July 6. This group of 23 students, sponsored by Keren Hatarbut, will spend seven weeks in Israel. Because of their rich Hebrew educational background, they will be in a better position to serve as "interpreters" of Canadian life to Israelis and of Israeli life to Canadians. Their leader, Mr. Yaacov Chetner, Principal of the Edmonton Hebrew School, is himself a product of the educational institutions of the Keren Hatarbut.

DANSVILLE ACCEPTS CANADA $

Bernarr Macfadden Castle on the Hill Spa at Dansville, New York, which draws hundreds of health-minded Canadian vacationers each year, has become the first resort in the United States to counter the discount on Canadian currency in terms of U.S. funds, by accepting Canadian money at par.

Canadian bookings at the Hotel, which is 75 miles from Buffalo, have been significantly affected by the devaluation of the Canadian dollar; but because the Bernarr Macfadden Spa has long been a favorite of Canadians, the hotel management has adopted a policy of accepting Canadian money at par as a gesture of goodwill to old customers and to encourage more Canadians to visit the health vacation resort.

KEREN HATARBUT

Keren Hatarbut, which has made great strides in the past few years in the development of its educational and cultural activities across Canada, will sponsor this summer eight important cultural projects. The Four Massad Camps in the Laurentians, in Ontario and in Gimli, Manitoba — will again serve as "little Hebrew islands", where about 800 children and young people will spend their summer vacation in a Hebrew atmosphere and will enhance their knowledge of and attachment to Jewish-Zionist values and ideals.

Summer Conventions

Summer is upon us and with it the increased tax rates the local city council voted in May. Do not think the councilman escapes scot free, however. He worries about re-election. He thanks Providence for arranging elections in November, six months after the tax raise and six months before he will have to vote for another one, but he also berates Providence for the memories of men.

So right after the town comptroller informs the elected body that indeed, they have done it again, they have raised taxes, a great wave of remorse washes over the august body and just about then someone gains the floor to suggest if the council will cut out "miscellaneous" expenses there will be no rise in the mill rate which is a lot like asking a neighbor, please, there are some secrets we all have to keep to ourselves.

If there were no "miscellaneous" expenditures there would be no ultraconservative right wing. It is the inability to cut them away, excise them, that causes all the political dissension in our special universes.

I am reminded of the time I was a member of an old Jewish fraternal order some 35 years ago. The lodge did lots of good work and one of the rewards to the members was the opportunity to attend the annual convention in Atlantic City.

Huge by-elections were held to determine the lucky delegates to the big annual dinner. And these elected delegates were charged with bringing back a report on the convention banquet and its cost so the membership would know how its money was spent and also have something to argue about during the winter sessions.

There was always a dissenter, the fellow who questioned the expense. And one year the argument came from a fellow who did not know the meaning of "miscellaneous."

Like many of the lodge members, he was an immigrant and his command of English was less than Shakespearean. And so he listened carefully to the report; cost of dinner, so much, tips, wine, entertainment, and finally, "miscellaneous," $63.19. And the member rose in indignation: "I want to know how you can spend $63.19 for black olives," the word "miscellaneous" sounding so much like the word "miscellinins," meaning in Yiddish, pickled black olives, and the fellow was never convinced. To this day he believes the banquet expense was padded.

Dr. Jung would say he represented an archetypical psychological formation of all men. I believe every councilman in the back of his head somehow believes "miscellaneous" expenses can be equated with black olives, pickled in delicious brine.

THE GREAT ESSAY — STILL LITERATURE

By BERNARD BASKIN

ENTER, CONVERSING:
by Clifton Fadiman;
Nelson Foster & Scott, $7.50

The once popular and widespread familiar essay is a dwindling literary commodity. Our bustling frenetic age is a form that tends to be discursive, leisurely and free-flowing. This rejection is unfortunate. The essay is a unique form of the last successful practitioners of the essay — an art that he wields with skill and urbanity. "Enter, Conversing," like its predecessors "Party of One" and "Any Number Can Play," covers a wide variety of themes. The author's first love is literature, a vein that is tapped for about a third of the thirty or so essays. The others deal with Fadiman's impressions of modern England, the debasing of the English language, good food and fine restaurants, the plight of humor in the jet age, the addition to catagories, and the marks of a great man. The author descants on sex in modern literature, tells us why he thinks "The Red and the Black" is a great work of art and why "Madam Bovary" is distasteful. He comments on the pleasures of random reading and provides an intriguing list of "dippable" volumes.

My favorite essay is concerned with how authors have begun and ended their books. Confronted with famous first and last lines we are quickly off on the old game of identifying what work begins with the arresting salvo: "What ho!" — "Beowulf," of course. A widely read novel begins with the sentence "On Friday noon, July twentieth, 1714, the finest bridge in all Peru broke and precipitated five travelers into the gulf below." — this is from "The Bridge of San Luis Rey" by Thornton Wilder. One of the most frightening books ever written begins portentously: "It was a bright cold day in April, and the clocks were striking thirteen." Many will remember that this comes from George Orwell's "1984." Fadiman believes that the following concluding words are the most poignant ever written: "Such was the end, Echecrates, of our friend; concerning whom I may truly say, that all the men of his time whom I have known, he was the wisest and justest and best." — this is from Plato's "Phaedo" which describes the last hours of condemned Socrates.

In some "advanced" circles Fadiman has been unfairly dubbed "the darling of the middle-brows." On the contrary, he has a well-stocked and imaginative mind and the capacity to express himself with charm and distinction — unusual attributes that should be welcomed by all who care for good writing and clear thinking.

SENSATION IN EUROPE

ITALIAN MAYOR PROMOTES ISRAELI - ARAB PEACE; WILL SOON VISIT JERUSALEM

Paris (JCN) Signor Giorgio La Spina, the Mayor of Florence and President of the Mediterranean Congress of Culture which organizes the Florence "Colloquy" will visit Israel in September as a guest of Mr. Joseph Golan. This was stated here to the JCN correspondent by Mr. Golan upon his return from Florence on Friday.

During his stay there last week Mr. Golan handed over his resignation as Secretary General of the Mediterranean Congress. But the Executive unanimously refused to accept it. Signor La Spina's visit to Israel — though of a private character — will be a demonstration of friendship to Mr. Golan. Signor La Spina is known for his influence in Vatican circles, and as a close personal friend to the Italian Prime Minister, Signor Fanfani.

In an interview for the JCN, Mr. Golan said that he explained to the Executive that the Congress had reached a stage when its main task now would be to get the co-operation of Egyptian, Syrian, and Lebanese intellectuals to its work. As an Israeli he could not take any effective action in this field and visit these countries. He proposed to the Executive to elect in his place M. Alain

Paris — In the hearing of a group of bystanders, Ilya Ehrenburg was challenged here two weeks ago to throw light on the Stalinist anti-Jewish terror and explain his own role, "which remains wrapped in a dark cloud of suspicion."

The incident occurred at the art gallery where Marc Chagall's latest exhibition was inaugurated, and the challenge was thrown by the Israeli Yiddish novelist, Mendel Mann, author of "At the Gates of Moscow," the World War II trilogy which has become a French best-seller.

Introduced to Ehrenburg by Chagall's daughter, Ida, Mann, disregarding social niceties, bluntly asked the Soviet-Jewish writer why in his memoirs "you speak openly about everything except the anti-Jewish terror in Russia? You as the sole surviving member of the Presidium of the Jewish Anti-Fascist Committee in Moscow are widely accused of collaboration with those responsible for the death of your colleagues."

Ehrenburg replied that he was the victim of a campaign of calumny launched "in the Jewish world."

Urged to seize the opportunity of clearing himself here now, Ehrenburg, evasively claimed he had too many prior engagements in Paris before returning to Moscow (he left the following day) but promised to thrash out the matter on his next visit to the French capital.

Asked for his opinion about

Jewish life in general and Yiddish writers in particular in the Soviet Union today, Ehrenburg said, "One does not know of any Yiddish writers, except one, Kagan."

"Why not," demanded Mann, "as a former member of the Jewish Anti-Fascist Committee and the only one spared by Stalin, don't you feel under obligation to bearers of Jewish culture?"

Ehrenburg invoked "old age" as an excuse for his passivity. During the dramatic conversation which lasted 20 minutes, Ehrenburg frequently writhed in embarrassment and gave the impression he was afraid to speak out.

Jealousy At 75

DR. ROSE N. FRANZBLAU

QUESTION: I am a man past 75. After being a widower for two years I married a widow six months ago, who is eight years younger than I am. She is an attractive and good looking woman. I am still active in my own little service business five days a week and have very early hours.

I have a second cousin, a European fellow who is 35, unmarried and lives and works in a nearby city. He visits us about twice a month. He gets here on a Saturday afternoon and leaves Sunday afternoon — staying over at my house.

Not long ago, my wife, without saying anything to me, asked him to stay over till Monday, and he did unhesitatingly. This being a business day for me, I left my house around 5 a.m., leaving my wife and cousin to themselves.

I would like to know if it was proper for my wife to make his invitation and for the cousin to accept it.

ANSWER: In a recent international conference, research was reported showing that the physical and emotional expression of loving desires by older people was an important factor in prolonging their lives as well as their physical health and emotional well-being.

With that new knowledge and understanding marriages of people in their older years are being welcomed and encouraged more and more.

Each of the older pair brings into the new marriage many of the reactions and attitudes they had in the first marriage and have to make marital adjustments all over again. A wife who did not feel fully appreciated in her first marriage will demand extra praise and appreciation even when what she gets from the new husband is more than she ever got before. The new husband will look for the same little reactions in his new wife that he found objectionable in his first wife.

A man who felt dominated by his first wife will be apprehensive when his second wife makes decisions and takes matters into her own hands.

Jealousy, which can be annoying, inappropriate and unbecoming in the younger years, can be a very charming, youthful and lovely expression of love in the later years if it isn't too exaggerated. Feeling competitive with a man 40 years your junior shows how you feel. But, realistically, though your wife is seven years younger than you, she is years older than your cousin and actually is old enough to be his mother.

You have a point in your wish to have your wife consult you before having any guests over, even if only for dinner or an evening together. It is quite proper for you to tell your wife that you would like to be consulted about any plans and that you would like invitations to your home to come from both of you. Then you could play the role of host alongside that of your wife as hostess. Your cousin must feel close to both of you to come so regularly and to stay on when he is invited to do so.

Your real objection may be to the motherly treatment that your wife extends to your cousin. He in turn may look upon both of you as substitute parents and be somewhat more dependent in his behavior than you like.

For you to continue to have a fulfilled life, it must continue to be full of people and associations. Some people, on their retirement, retire from all social contacts and activities. You apparently have had this before and should wish to have it in the happy future you look forward to with your new life.

A BIGOT FALLS

One of the M.P.'s to go down in the recent election was Joseph Murphy of Sarnia.

Joseph Murphy was the Parliamentarian who thought so little of some of the people he represented that he inserted a clause in the deed to his property banning all persons of Southern and Eastern European origin to the fourth generation and Jews of whatever generation or origin.

CALLED JEWS "SHYLOCKS"

Murphy was not a member who owed his seat to the Diebenaker landslides of 1957 and 1958. He had been a sitting member for many years before that. On one occasion he caused a stir by referring to a local Jewish family in the scrap iron business as "Shylocks" (speaking, of course, from the security of his liberal House of Commons seat).

For years the insult of this racial restrictive covenant bore a particular sting for the non-Nordic members of Lambton West since it was a slight administered by the man "representing" them in Parliament.

Now, though it is true that the clause remains, at least it loses the stigma and pain of being delivered by a "people's representative" Joe Murphy's xenophobia and anti-Semitism now no longer bear a Parliamentary "hehshner."

It is on the plane of the ordinary insecure xenophobe and "know-nothing."

BLUM TO HAMILTON
Sid Blum of Montreal and Toronto who has been national field director of the Jewish Labour Committee in Canada and secretary of the Canadian Labour Congress' Human Rights Committee, is moving to Hamilton. There he will be research director of the Hamilton Social Planning Council and will do some lecturing in sociology at McMaster University.

Sid Blum, a father of five, is a native of Brooklyn and veteran of the U.S. Army who married in Canada and has made this country his home. He is widely known in labour and Jewish communal circles.

SOME CONFERENCE STORIES

All three newly-elected Jewish M.P.'s were present at the Canadian Jewish Congress Plenary Session in Toronto the other week: Liberal Herb Gray of Windsor, New Democratic Dave Orlikow of Winnipeg and Dave Lewis of Toronto. Orlikow came as a Western Region delegate and the other two as observers. The fourth member, Leon Crestohl of Montreal-Cartier — an old time communal figure and Congress committee-member and an accredited delegate — was not in attendance though he had been expected.

Another legislator seen at the conference was M.A. (Moishe) Gray, M.L.A. now in his grizzled seventies, a veteran of the Manitoba legislature — former Ontario M.P.P. John Glass also participated as a delegate.

"MADE YOU JEWISH?"
The waiters at the King Edward Hotel handling their first kosher-catered meal must have been thoroughly drilled on the fine distinctions of kashruth for this is what happened to a diner-delegate who was on a special diet for health reasons and found himself unable to cope with what was on his plate:

— Delegate: "Waiter, I'm sorry, I'm not permitted to eat this food."
— Waiter: "What's a matter? What religion are you? Aren't you the same religion as all these other people?"

TURNING "NO" TO "YES"

There seems to be a tendency among editors and reporters, particularly among those in the desk administration of the press who write captions, to assume that anything said by a clergyman on the question of religious education in the public schools must by definition favour it. So much so does this tendency appear, that in the last period there have been three cases where captions and headlines directly contradicted the story's content and in all cases it involved clergymen.

The first was a story in the Kitchener-Waterloo newspaper about a year ago which was headed "Majority of Clergymen Favour School Religious Instruction." The news story below when read with some attention indicated that of the nine clergymen approached, five opposed such teaching. The next case was in Canadian Commentator when an article by the Reverend Mr. Gillies of Clarkson United Church appeared on the subject. The heading read "We Should Teach Christianity in Schools." The article itself, however, made a thesis directly to the contrary stating quite unequivocally that religious instruction had no place in the classroom.

ADVENTIST'S VIEWS DISTORTED

Most recent sample is an address by the Reverend Darren L. Michael, an executive of the Seventh day - Adventist Church in Canada. Mr. Michael was speaking to a Trustees' and Ratepayers' Association in Port Hope explaining why he feels that the type of watered-down religion which is the kind which of necessity is the variety taught in a public school context is in his opinion useless and actually deleterious to true religion. A suggestion he made for gradual changes in progressing to a final solution to the problem was as follows:

"Let classes, when requested by parents, be held either the first or last period of the school day, then change to classes immediately after the last period with Church supplied materials and personnel on school grounds for a nominal fee. Finally, let these classes be entirely under Church supervision, on church property, with church trained teachers."

"We should take a lesson from our Jewish citizens," he said, "who hold classes at their synagogues, after school hours, to preserve their religious heritage, and seem to have little trouble in getting their youth to attend," he concluded. The point here of course is that there should be a gradual solution to getting religious education out of the public school. The Port Hope Evening Guide headed the news report on Mr. Darren Michael's talk Religious Education In School Should Proceed By Gradual Steps, leaving of course the opposite impression, i.e. that he wanted religious education brought in and retained in the public schools — even if only by gradual steps. True the Peterboro Examiner did the same story more justice and gave it a heading more reflective of its meaning: "Church Fails To Educate, School Used as Crutch."

CANADA'S LEADING JEWISH NEWSPAPER IN ENGLISH

THE HASIDIM

MISH-MASH IN A GREAT NEWSPAPER

No matter how well informed and how reliable a general newspaper may be, occasionally it could slip when it endeavors to present some facets of Judaism. There certainly are few newspapers comparable in stature and responsible reporting of facts to the New York Times. But last week, in the heat of the Yossele Schumacher—discovery in New York, the newspaper which publishes "all the news fit to print" somehow goofed when explaining Hasidism.

For example, the New York Times (Monday, July 2nd) stated:

"... Members of the Hasidim may not ride in automobiles on the Sabbath, nor may they use elevators or anything mechanical..."

"... Some women walk great distances to ultra-kosher shops because they suspect that some proprietors are lax..."

We could continue to point to more nonsense in this article. Everyone conversant with Judaism knows that:

1. Hasidim have no "members" — since there is no such organization.

2. Mitnagdim (the opponents of the Hasidic school), if they are observant Jews, will not ride in automobiles on the Sabbath. The observance of Sabbath has absolutely nothing to do with Hasidic or Mitnagdic Judaism; it is a fundamental of the Torah law, a basic of the Halakha.

3. Any Jewish woman who believes in kashrut will make sure that she is not misled when buying kosher food.

The author of the New York Times article must have quoted the wrong item in an encyclopedia when he wrote that the present Hasidic movement is a "sect founded about the third century B.C. by opponents of Hellenistic innovations". Certainly the present-day Hasidim, the disciples and followers of the Baal Shem Tov (1700-1760), are millennia away from the concept of the B.C.E. Hasid...

Sometimes, when we read this sort of interpretation of Judaism in newspapers, we hope that those in the Jewish community concerned with adult Jewish education properly evaluate the importance of a responsible Jewish newspaper.

ALIYAH

CANADIAN JEWRY AND ISRAEL

Shlomo Zalmen Shragai, the scholarly head of the Jewish Agency's Aliyah Department, spent several days in Canada in order to promote his "business": the idea of emigration from Canada to Israel.

Mr. Shragai, a former mayor of the Holy city of Jerusalem and a profound thinker and writer on Jewish religious subjects, would prefer the Hebrew term, Aliyah, to the English equivalent of Jewish immigration into Israel.

In several addresses and causeries devoted to Aliyah at meetings of Mizrahi-Hapoel Hamizrachi, the Zionist Organization of Canada, the B'nai Zion Order and in an interview with this newspaper, Mr. Shragai re-defined in a very original manner the concept of Aliyah.

The eminent Israeli spoke first of the Aliyah problem as it affects the non-Jewish world. Mr. Shragai believes that our non-Jewish friends in the western world cannot understand the complete disinterest of Zionists towards personal emigration to Israel. For decades Zionists have been preaching the gospel of a Jewish homeland, a Jewish spiritual center for those Jews who desire to live a full Jewish life — to be Jews in a Jewish country. Who should build this Jewish spiritual center? Must it be the labor of only those who are forced to flee a country where one's life is threatened or can it be the creation of free men whose ideal is the consolidation of Jewish sovereignty and Jewish national, independent living?

It would be wrong for Zionists to dismiss these and similar utterances on the duty of Aliyah as irrelevant to the Zionist movement in the Diaspora, in the free world. They are very relevant, very pertinent to Zionism. In fact they are an integral part of the Zionist philosophy. Those Zionists who are trying to substitute cultural activities, propaganda, theoretical hair-splitting for actual Aliyah are only stripping Zionism from its natural garb — that of Aliyah.

Aliyah in Hebrew means to go upwards. He who emigrates to Israel is called Oleh — one who mounts the hill, who ascends. This kind of mountain climbing is a very complicated national sport. However it cannot be dismissed as nonsense — by Zionists.

Mr. Shragai succeeded in bringing across this message to Canadian Zionists. We are sure that he has turned a new leaf in the book of Canadian Zionism.

THE AFRICAN NATO

WILL NASSER SUCCEED?

The conference in Cairo of the Casablanca African group (Egypt, Morocco, Mali, Ghana, and Guinea) has apparently finally decided to set up the African High Command. The original idea is attributed to President Nkrumah of Ghana, early in the United Nations operation in the Congo. The proposal then hung fire, partly because the Casablanca group hoped to win recruits from the growing Monrovia group, which had different ideas on military as well as economic and political forms of inter-African cooperation, says the London Times. The plan is, apparently, to set up in Cairo a headquarters staff with a commander-in-chief something like Shapi in Paris; to the C-in-C. would be allocated local contingents ready in their own countries for service. They hardly face a common danger, as the NATO forces do. Nor could they exercise together — though possibly their naval vessels might rendezvous for some Operation Anti-Colonialist.

The Times points out that it would be wrong to dismiss the high command as an empty counter-gesture to NATO (which, along with the Common Market, President Nkrumah — who also plans an African common market — calls an imperialist danger). However, this new Nasser-Nkrumah ruled organization would be largely dependent on American (and NATO) aircraft, which would be distasteful to President Nkrumah. Its exclusive use would also antagonize the Monrovia countries.

Responsible Jewish opinion, however, does not share the opinion of the London Times leader. Amos of our JCNFS states:

"Despite the fuss being made in Cairo, the three-day conference of the heads of State of the Casablanca Charter Powers has not resulted in any major new decisions. The big talking point — the agreement to establish an African High Command — is only a repetition of the decision reached over a year ago at the Casablanca meeting when President Nasser of Egypt, King Hassan of Morocco, President Keita of Mali, President Sekou Touré of Guinea and Dr. Nkrumah of Ghana agreed that such a command was desirable for the protection of African independence. This project has now been taken a stage further. Egypt's Colonel Fathi Kudeir has been named Chief of Staff and Accra has been designated headquarters for the new command. But this is still a long way from the vision of an African 'Nato' envisaged by Egypt's Nasser and Guinea's Touré."

The $250,000 which the five participants have agreed to put into the kitty to get the African High Command started will pay for little more than the establishment of offices. It will take many millions to achieve standardization of weapons and establish channels of communication across the thousands of miles that separate the Casablanca Charter nations. The initial task of co-ordinating the military phraseology used by Egyptians, Guineans and Malinese, under Russian instructors, mainly British-trained Ghanaians and Moroccans whose forces are based on the French pattern, is in itself formidable, although the Russians will no doubt be only too happy to help.

The dream of an African Common Market also seems destined to remain little more than that, despite the fact that at least some of the participants are hopeful of bringing it into being by next January. The Moroccans, however, do not seem to share Egypt's enthusiasm. Only last week, an official commentator in Rabat suggested that a Maghreb Arab Common Market must be a natural precursor to any wider entity and added that there were many internal problems — not least in Algeria — to be settled before any move could be made in this direction.

The conclusion seems inescapable that the main objective of this latest meeting of the Casablanca Charter heads of State (from which Dr. Nkrumah was absent owing to difficulties at home), was to impress members of the rival Monrovia "bloc" with their earnestness in the military and economic fields. This might induce them to switch their affiliation.

But there is no reason to suppose that the Monrovia Powers (which include most former French territories in Africa and Nigeria, Liberia, Ethiopia, Sierra Leone and Somalia) are very impressed. And without them the whole concept of an "African" and an African Common Market remain somewhat hollow. So, too, does President Nasser's hope of mobilizing African opinion against Israel, though the final communiqué at the end of the Cairo conference once again denounced Israel as a tool of imperialism in Africa.

As if to emphasize the hopelessness of Nasser's ambition while President Tubman of Liberia arrived in Israel, an Israeli delegation returned home from conference of independent African countries at Donia, in the Cameroon Republic, to consider the Continent's economic future, and the President of the Central African Republic left Israel after signing a treaty of friendship and co-operation. There is plenty of bark in the Casablanca Charter. Its sponsors have yet to prove that it also has bite.

STAR CITY FESTIVAL

By proclamation of the Mayor, "New York is a Summer Festival." The welcome mat is out for approximately five million tourists who are expected this summer to visit the metropolis which John Gunther ("Inside U.S.A.") describes as "the incomparable, the brilliant star city of cities."

The official hostess of this summer's festival is Mimi Benzell, co-star with Molly Picon of "Milk and Honey." Among the attractions are the concerts at the Lewisohn Stadium, master-minded for the 45th season by Minnie Guggenheim, the Guggenheim-Goldman Band Free Concerts in Central Park, and the Shakespeare-in-the-Park Festival, which has been brought up as an Orthodox Jew he was fully aware of the problem of antisemitism. "However," he argued, "having studied the play carefully I feel that Shakespeare was interested mainly in human behavior. The play is a revelation of human conduct under certain pressures and conditions. Antisemitism is not the issue here."

By a coincidence, Bernard Grebanier's new book, "The Truth About Shylock," is just off the press. The Brooklyn College Professor's thesis is that "Shakespeare could not

MUCH ADO ABOUT SHYLOCK

According to the New York Board of Rabbis, representing over 800 Conservative, Orthodox and Reform Rabbis in Greater New York, "The Merchant of Venice" is an anti-semitic play. A delegation of the Board protested to the City authorities for subsidizing the performance of "The Merchant" and permitting it to be played in a Municipal Park. The rabbis were especially worried about the impact of "The Merchant" on a nationwide television audience.

Joseph Papp, the originator and producer of the Shakespeare-in-the-Park Festival, replied that having been brought up as an Orthodox Jew he was fully aware of the problem of antisemitism. "However," he argued, "having studied the play carefully I feel that Shakespeare was interested mainly in human behavior. The play is a revelation of human conduct under certain pressures and conditions. Antisemitism is not the issue here."

By a coincidence, Bernard Grebanier's new book, "The Truth About Shylock," is just off the press. The Brooklyn College Professor's thesis is that "Shakespeare could not of the surf or the mountain wind? have anticipated that Shylock would become the emblem about which so much contention would rage." Dr. Grebanier's erudite study argues that Shakespeare used the word "Jew" in the loose sense of the Elizabethan writers, "to mean non-believer..." and Shakespeare has made Shylock not very much of a Jew at all. He further points out that the man who wrote "Hath not a Jew eyes?" "... must of necessity have stood far above all possibility of nurturing antisemitic feelings.

Unconvinced by Professor Grebanier's 399-page defence of Shylock, Rabbi Louis I. Newman devoted a Sabbath sermon to the topic "Shylock in Central Park — a Municipal and Cultural Mistake," while his colleagues of the New York Board of Rabbis gave a warning that presenting "The Merchant" for mass audiences "is a cause for grave concern and objection."

Mr. Papp and the Parks Commissioner, Mr. Newbold Morris, finally agreed to ask the C.B.S. Television Network not to release the tape of "The Merchant" to stations outside New York. "I am doing this," Mr. Papp said "not because the play is antisemitic, but because the rabbis seemed so sincerely concerned." (Copyright by The Canadian Jewish News & JCNFS)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Social Credit Surge

Dear Editor:
One of the developments causing a ruffle in some quarters of the Jewish community is the incredible upsurge of Social Credit in Quebec, especially in the rural sections. The questionable past of this movement is the factor so disquieting. Some consolation can be drawn from the fact that Real

Caouette, leader of the 26 Quebec Creditists, does not belong to the anti-Semiticly tinged Union Des Electeurs faction in Quebec "Social Creditry," the Union of Electors, led by Louis Even, did not take part in the election — disdaining the ballot box and the party machine as not their way of doing things. REPORT FROM ROME

THE VATICAN & THE JEWS

By TULLIA ZIVI

Whatever controversy there may be in Jewish circles, the Vatican is quite clear about the status of Dr. Chaim Vardi, who arrives in Rome next month on behalf of the World Jewish Congress. He will be the official representative there of the W.J.C. and, as a Vatican source told me, "he will follow the proceedings of the Ecumenical Council so as to inform both himself and the W.J.C. on the issues concerning Jews which might be examined during the Council sessions."

Naturally, this source added, "since the followers of Sholem are not Christians, Dr. Vardi will not attend the Council in an official capacity. He will not be qualified as an 'observer-delegate' nor even as an 'unofficial observer.' The belief is that Dr. Vardi will be allowed to follow the proceedings as a 'guest of Cardinal Bea's Secretariat,' a category which is expected to include both Christian and non-Christian personalities who have a close interest in the issues under discussion but are not representative of their religious grouping."

The question of modifications to the Catholic liturgy in order to eradicate what might be considered anti-Jewish overtones is one topic which may well come up for consideration. Dr. Nahum Goldmann is understood to have discussed this matter when he met Cardinal Bea last month. It may also have been dealt with in a secret document submitted by Cardinal Bea's Secretariat to the Central Preparatory Commission for the Ecumenical Council which met here between June 12 and 20. This document is known to have made reference to the Jews but the only information available is that it was approved by the Commission without controversy.

Catholic circles are keenly aware of the interest being shown by Jewish individuals and bodies in the Ecumenical Council. The most recent issue of "Civiltà Cattolica," official journal of the Italian Jesuits, commented editorially: "The Ecumenical Council continues to attract the attention of Jewish circles, not so much in view of the improbable presence of observers, but rather for the opening of a so-called dialogue having the purpose of achieving a greater mutual knowledge and understanding."

Quoting from recent reports in both the "Jerusalem Post" and "Davar," the Jesuit journal observes that references to Jews in the Catholic liturgy appear to be one of the most frequent if not always enlightened and moderate preoccupations of Jewish newspapers. It notes too that the President of the American Jewish Committee had expressed his satisfaction that the forthcoming Ecumenical Council might deal with passages of the liturgy which could be considered hostile to Jews and that the matter had also been discussed at a confer-

Popular Torontonion: Joseph Donnenfield

Joseph Donnenfield

If you ask Joe Donnenfield the definition of a "millionaire" his ready answer is, "The fellow who has a giving heart". By this definition, Joseph Donnenfield is himself a millionaire many times over, and hundreds of Jewish families in Europe and Israel can attest to the warmth and generosity of his "giving heart".

Slight and small of stature, sweet and gentle of disposition, yet with an inner well-spring of energy which belies his 77 years, Joe Donnenfield has for the past seven years accomplished a remarkable feat of charity on behalf of the Ontario Moess Chittin Fund. Through his gift for organization and his selfless devotion, substantial sums of money are raised each year to purchase Matzo and wine for Passover tables abroad.

The success story of this phase of the fund is truly in the "acorn to oak" tradition. As Joe Donnenfield recalled for me when I visited him the other afternoon, it all began some eleven years ago in Miami Beach, when a group of vacationing Torontonians held a Purim Party and found themselves with a surplus of $12.00. The three organizers of the party — Max Rosen, Joseph Herman, and Simon Wilson, decided to send the money to the Canadian Jewish Congress in Toronto, to be used for some charitable purpose. The Purim Party in Miami became an annual event, and in 1955, following the death of Simon Wilson, Joe Donnenfield was appointed to the committee. That year, D. Lou Harris came to Miami to address the gathering and the sum of $800. was raised. Spearheaded by Joe Donnenfield, the size and scope of the event expanded each successive year so that now it is firmly established as a traditional annual banquet. Last year it was attended by more than 500 guests with proceeds of $6,000. Recently, new members were added to the Miami Beach committee — Samuel Himel serves as co-chairman with Joe, and other officers are Max Rosen, Joseph Steinberg and Max Berenbaum.

Together with a "giving heart," Joe Donnenfield also possesses a talent for finance. This latter trait evidenced itself very early in his career — back in Rumania where he was born. Following graduation from high school as an honor student, Joe was given a position in the National Bank of Rumania — the first Jewish boy to do so. When he emigrated to New York with his parents and brother in 1900, Joe continued in the banking business with the Irving Trust Company, on the basis of his excellent recommendation from Rumania.

In 1906, the Donnenfields moved to Toronto, and shortly afterwards Joe was married to the former Janet Haberman. Joe Donnenfield also possesses a talent for finance. The Scroll of Honor presented to him on this occasion hangs proudly beside a similar one he received in 1961 testifying to the outstanding contribution he has made to the United Jewish Relief Agency of Canadian Jewish Congress through its Moess Chittin Fund.

Although he retired from business a number of years ago, Joe still continues to work actively for numerous community causes where his counsel is deeply respected — the Associated Hebrew Schools, Mizrahi Organization, Baycrest Hospital, State of Israel Bonds, Jewish Theological Seminary, Immigrant Aid Society, the Z.O.C., and others.

Three of Joe Donnenfield's sons and one daughter live in Toronto. Robert, the eldest, resides in Los Angeles, and Rose in Miami. He has 14 grandchildren and 9 great-grandchildren. Following the death of his first wife in 1934, Joe married Leah Romberg who shares his deep interest in charitable works and is a noted leader in her own right, for such causes as the Weston Sanatorium, the Viewmont Talmud Torah and the Lagover Society.

SERMON FOR THE WEEK

SERVICE OF THE HEART

How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, thy tabernacles, O Israel. (Numbers XXIV, 5).

It may appear remarkable that this utterance of the heathen prophet, Balaam, should rank as the opening verse of our Prayer Book, setting the tone and mood for Israel's daily devotions. Indeed, the celebrated Halachic authority of the 16th century, Rabbi Solomon Luria, omitted this verse from his prayers, for the very reason that Balaam, Israel's sworn enemy, had come to curse rather than to bless. Jewish custom has overridden this objection; familiar in the mouth of young and old by constant repetition, embellished by the musical settings composed for it, the "Ma Tovu" has become one of the most popular and beloved verses of the Prayer Book. And it is a sound instinct that has prompted its retention. For the text of our formal prayers provide us with the body, which in itself has shape, form and meaning. But each worshipper must himself infuse that body with the soul and the spirit that will bring it to life for him.

Balaam, the heathen prophet, could utter words of surpassing beauty in praise of Israel, but he still remains Balaam the Wicked in Jewish tradition, for his heart had other designs. Yet these self-same words become transformed into the living vehicle of Israel's daily dialogue with his Creator when they emerge from a Jew's sincere and prayerful heart.

On the very first page of the Siddur, we are thus obliquely warned to avoid the facile flow of familiar words that so often takes the place of real prayer; that reduces what should be a living experience into a mechanical movement of the lips, divorced from all inward sincerity, a body without a soul, without the spirit of life in it. Said the Baal Shem: "The first-time a thing happens in nature, it is looked upon as a miracle; let it be repeated a few times, and people will regard it as perfectly natural, paying no further attention to it. Let your worship and your service be a fresh miracle every day to you. Only such worship, performed from the heart, with enthusiasm, is acceptable."

Unfortunately, our generation has lost the true art of prayer, and we are much the poorer for it. Prosperity and self-sufficiency have weakened our spiritual capacities; the urge for comfort has made us indolent; the pre-occupation with material success and the pandering to the unlively cult of the body have covered our hearts with a fatty layer of grossness through which the soul cannot penetrate.

The words of "Ma Tovu" invoke a different attitude. The phrase "How goodly!" expresses the sense of privilege that a Jew must experience when he enters God's sacred house. Too many of us come to the synagogue in a spirit of condescension, as if conferring a favour on the Almighty by our attendance. But the indebtedness lies all on our side, and the sincere Jew expresses it very meaningfully when he recites the "Mamid" prayer of the "Amida" thanking God "for our lives that are committed unto Thy hand, and for our souls which are in Thy charge, and for Thy miracles which are daily with us, evening, morning and noontime."

If the hands are the hands of Jacob, busy in rearing many magnificent tabernacles to the greater glory of God, the voice of Jacob which is the authentic voice of prayer, must resound within them, and come back into its own.

CONGREGATION SHAAR HASHOMAYIM

The Men's Association Eleventh Torah Institute in the Laurentians took place on the weekend of Friday, June 15th to the 17th at Castle Des Monts, Ste. Agathe. The theme of the Institute was "Jewish Contribution to World Ethics" with Mr. Benjamin Herson, Director of Extension Activities, as faculty guest. Mr. Maurice H. Brotman, was general chairman and Reverend J. J. Fromm conducted the Sabbath Services.

On Friday, 6.30 p.m. in the Chapel of Castle Des Monts, the Mincho Services were rendered by Mr. Harold Shapiro and the Sabbath Eve Service, Kabbolas Shabbos by Reverend Fromm. The Sabbath Eve Dinner was preceded by the chanting of Sholom Aleichem and the Kiddush by Reverend Fromm. Mr. Brotman presided and Mr. S. Laddie Kert, president of the Men's Association, extended greetings to one of the largest gatherings of the Laurentian Institute. The First Seminar on the topic "Foundations of Jewish Ethics" was given by Mr. Herson with Mr. Alexander I. Poppler, presiding. The seminar dealt with first principles of the Judaic conception of God, man and nature in terms of the Jewish classical sources. A discussion and midnight snack followed.

The Sabbath morning witnessed in prayer at Sabbath Services led by Reverend Fromm. A mood of genuine worship and religious experience prevailed during those hours, followed by Kiddush and Sabbath Dinner. Mr. Sam N. Shacter, 2nd vice-president of the Men's Association, presided. The traditional Sabbath rest gave participants an opportunity to enjoy the sunlight and natural beauty of the surroundings. Mincho Services led by Reverend Fromm took place followed by a study session in Pirkei Ovos, led by Mr. Herson and presided over by Harry Barshaw. The content of the Seminar was the first chapter of the Ethics of the Fathers and a detailed discussion of the fundamental concepts touched on by the sages of the Mishna stimulated a lively debate. The Soudoh Shlishit followed with Mr. Nat Brucker presiding. Rabbi and Mrs. Joseph Meyer of Congregation Beth Israel, Ste. Agathe, were the guests of honor on this occasion. The Rabbi extended greetings on behalf of his community and praised the work of the Institute. Maariv Services and Havdalah climaxed a peaceful and beautiful Sabbath. Despite the lateness of the hour, a Symposium on "Ethics in Business and Civic Affairs" captured the interest and imagination of the participants until the midnight hour. This session was chaired by Mr. Shapiro and moderated by Dr. A. Stillman, with Messrs. Edgar H. Cohen and Alvin Shiller as discussants. Dr. Stillman reviewed the fundamentals of Jewish ethics as background for the discussion. Mr. Cohen dealt with business legislation in biblical and rabbinic sources and Mr. Shiller gave a contemporary view of civic affairs practices among Jews in Israel and Diaspora. A controversial discussion ensued, with many participating.

On Sunday morning, Shachris Services were led by Mr. Isadore Mendel, Mr. Joe Eliesen presided over the breakfast. The annual meeting and election of officers took place with Mr. S. Appreciation was expressed by those present to the outgoing Executive and a warm welcome to the new.

The concluding Seminar on the topic: "Judaism's Dialogue with the World" climaxed the study programme of the Institute. Mr. Joe Eliesen presided. Mr. Herson discussed the relationship of religion and ethics from various standpoints and submitted the thesis that religion is to ethics what form is to content; the mitzvot are the religious form of Jewish ethics. A discussion followed. The Closing Banquet brought the Institute to an inspiring conclusion. Mr. Brotman, as general chairman of the Institute, expressed his appreciation for the co-operative efforts extended him by his loyal committee and hotel management. Dr. Stillman, as Institute Historian, gave a brief evaluation of the weekend in terms of praise and satisfaction. The Institute concluded at 2.15 p.m.

A pleasant feature in the programme was the participation of the younger set in the persons of Joel Schachter and Meyer Fromm.

The Institute Committee comprised the following: chairman, Mr. Maurice H. Brotman; Parnass, Mr. Alexander I. Poppler; treasurer, Mr. Harold Shapiro; secretary, Mr. Mendel Segal; Historian, Dr. A. "DAVAR" STATES: AFFAIR FOR US IS NOT CLOSED

HOLON, Israel (CJN) — Yossele Schumacher back from the U.S. was only a shadow of his cheerful self of the evening before — skulking in corners and hiding himself from photographers who stood at the ready with poised flash-lamps to record every promising glance.

"I understand that I owe the return of the boy to the press," father Alter Schumacher sighed, indirectly admitting the reason why he has not thrown the photographers and reporters out.

SOVIET DIAMOND EXPERTS LAUD ISRAEL INDUSTRY

TEL AVIV, (CJN) — The Soviet diamond industry will try and satisfy the desire of Russian women for pretty ornamental diamonds by "employing Israeli technical knowledge together with Russian obstinacy and goodwill," it was stated here by the head of the departing Soviet diamond mission, production engineer Vasili Berezon, of Moscow.

The three-man delegation, which left Israel last week after a three-week stay, also includes Mr. Andrie Morgonov, light metal engineer, and Mr. Alexander Portnagin, polisher of precious stones, both of Sverdlovsk.

At their farewell party at the Gili Hall here, Mr. Gidon Lahav, the Diamond Controller, noted that the mission had come here at the initiative of the Soviet Ambassador in the framework of exchanges of industrial know-how. Not only can Israel learn much from Russian technology, he said, but, happily, Russia is also able to learn something from our young experience.

In his message of thanks to his Israeli hosts, Mr. Berezon noted that Israel surpasses the Western countries in methods of working small and medium-sized stones, while the West is still superior in the working of large diamonds.

Ahead of West

Mr. Morgonov, added that Israel is ahead of the West in the rationalization of labour in working stones.

He pointed out that while, in Western countries one worker does the entire job up to the final polishing of the diamond, the same work in Israel is divided among four to six workers, each of whom can be taught his specialized task in a short period.

Mr. Lahav stated that a return visit of Israeli diamond workers to Russia is planned, but no date set.

ISRAELI BUDGET THIS YEAR IS ONE BILLION

Jerusalem, (JCN) Israel's foreign currency estimated budget for the current fiscal year was given as $910,000,000 or $35,000,000 more than last year. Income from German reparations is expected to drop from $64,000,000 to $23,000,000 but exports are listed as increasing by $55,000,000.

Estimated expenditure for the year was given as $810,000,000, thus leaving a reserve of $100,000,000.

These figures were revealed by Mr. Simcha Soroker, head of the Budget Division at the Ministry of Finance, who estimated that the foreign currency balance, kept mainly at the Bank of Israel, might rise by as much as $15,000,000. Among figures given as result of special studies made by the division, the number of cars imported in 1959, which was 500, increased to 8,600 in 1961. In 1955, about 34,000 Israelis travelled abroad, and by 1961 this number had risen to 76,000 — this despite the great rise in travel tax.

APPEL IS NEW BONDS DIRECTOR

The appointment of M. A. Appel as National Field Director for the State of Israel Bond Organization of Canada is announced by D. Lou Harris, National Chairman.

Formerly assistant general manager, Mr. Appel assumes his new duties immediately and will be responsible for the conduct of Israel Bond campaigns across Canada, including supervision of field offices in Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Ottawa, Winnipeg, and Vancouver.

Following the completion of his education at McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario, Mr. Appel was on the Ottawa Citizen, first as a reporter and later as City Editor, which position he left in 1942 to become a war correspondent for Reuters, the British news agency, in the European Theatre. He also served Reuters as Editor of its Northern American services.

OPINIONS CANADA ZIONISTS AND EMIGRATION

At the end of last month Shlomo Zalman Shragal, former mayor of Jerusalem and present head of the Jewish Agency's Immigration Department, visited Toronto. He was accompanied by Rabbi Y. Duschinsky, director of the Jewish Agency's Aliyah Department.

Mr. Shragal addressed several meetings, one with the leaders of the Zionist Organization of Canada, the Religious Zionists of Canada, the B'nei Zion order and other groups. The topic to which the writer of the following letter refers was Aliyah.

Dear Editor, In your editorial of June 29th under the heading of "Encouraging Aliyah from Canada", you anticipated the remarks that Mr. Shragal, the head of the Jewish Agency's Aliyah Department, might make during his visit to Toronto, and you inferred critically, that the Zionist Organizations of Canada are doing nothing about this problem.

I should like to inform you that the Jewish Agency has operated two Aliyah offices in Canada since 1958 under the auspices of the United Zionist Council. One of these is in Toronto and one in Montreal.

The Zionist Organization of Canada has had a loan fund for the last eight years to assist Canadian immigrants to Israel with the cost of shipping their effects where necessary. Just a year ago, the Zionist Organization of Canada held a special all-day seminar in Ottawa on the subject of Aliyah, and since then, hardly an Executive Meeting has passed without some discussion or action on the subject.

Among the actions being taken is the organization of a Mortgage Loan Fund of substantial proportions to assist Canadians in Israel to acquire a decent housing. It is anticipated that an official release on this subject may be made at any time now.

You will be interested to know that 104 Canadians left for Israel in 1959, 135 in 1960 and 221 in 1961. Of these 221,

S. Z. SHRAGAL

Y. DUSCHINSKY

117 were under the age of 25, 79 were members of families including children, 68 were professionals and 66 were tradesmen and halutzim. You will be further interested to know that out of the 221 people, 110 were Canadian born and it is estimated that they took with them over half a million dollars in cash and have a monthly income from Canada of over four thousand dollars a month. You will see that Canada's contribution to Aliyah is not inconsequential, is constantly growing, and has important ramifications in a variety of directions.

If any of your readers are interested in further information, they can contact Mr. Carl Silberman at the Zionist Office, 651 Spadina Avenue, Toronto, or Mr. Alan Rose, at the Zionist Office, 2025 University St., Montreal.

FAMOUS SYNAGOGUE IN GERMANY RESTORED

COLOGNE, West Germany, (SPECIAL) — Perhaps the oldest example of friendly Jewish-Christian partnership north of the Alps — dating from a century when inter-faith tolerance was not the rule — came to light in Cologne recently. The item, put on public display in the city's Record Office, was a decree by the Emperor Constantine.

Constantine, the Roman ruler who died a Christian and after suggesting a church council in order to strengthen Europe's new faith, also practiced fair and equal treatment toward the Jews of the Rhineland, as the decree, dated 321 A.D., shows. In it, the emperor, despite his newly won enthusiasm for Christianity, permitted all his authorities in the Rhineland to employ Jewish civil servants.

The point of the exhibit in which the emperor's decree was displayed was to call attention to the 2,000-year history of the Jews in Germany. Even Cologne's famed cathedral was built with help from citizens of all faiths, including Jews.

Since the war, the University of Cologne has been a leading center of German attempts to revitalize the Jewish tradition in Germany, practically snuffed out by Hitler's dictatorship. Well-known German intellectuals, including Heinrich Boll, Paul Schallack and Wilhelm Unger, have participated in the help of the Germania Judaica.

Canada. On June 17, 1958, with various Christian and Jewish representatives present, a public announcement was made of an institution to be named after Martin Buber, the prominent German scholar of Jewish origin. Later the organization was named instead Germania Judaica.

As the Latin phrase indicates, the idea is to sponsor a representation of all Jewish contributions to German life. Says the group's bulletin:

"The Germania Judaica includes all works dealing with the 2,000-year history of the Jews in Germany, especially in the period since the beginning of the emancipation in the 18th century."

The main effort to date has been the collection of books, manuscripts and other source material on Jews in Germany. Arrangements are also made to send lecturers to schools, workers' educational associations, and student groups.

"It is neither our aim nor our ambition, 'the organization's bulletin continues, 'to compete with existing libraries and institutes specializing in subjects similar to those represented by the Germania Judaica. The aim rather is to make known the research results of the existing institutes and their source material to a broader public, through the help of the Germania Judaica."

GIRL WITH A SUITCASE TENSE DRAMA

THE CAST
Aida Claudia Cardinale
Lorenzo Jacques Perrin
Marcello Corrado Pani
Aunt Marta Luciana Angellilo
Piero Carlo Hinterman
Romolo Riccardo Garrone
Franco Renato Baldini
Father Intronzo Renato Valli

Directed by Valerio Zurlini; photography, Tina Santoni; music, Mario Nascimbene; produced by Maurizio Lodi; running time, 111 minutes.

A boy and girl ride along a roadside, leading to Parma, presumably towards a rendezvous. Apparently becoming chicken, he decides to dump her. So begins the Italian film, Girl With A Suitcase, now playing at Civic Square Theatre.

Gazing upon the beautiful Aida (Claudia Cardinale), one wonders why anyone would want to do a thing like that. Certainly a girl with loose morals can expect anything. However, Miss Cardinale portrays the promiscuous paramour so subtly, one is inclined to sympathize rather than criticize.

And always Lorenzo appears at her side, defending her, worshipping her, albeit it is a lost cause.

Claudia Cardinale is fascinating in her role of a wanton who still respects honest feeling. She does not desire to taint a young boy's first love.

Jacques Perrin appreciates Lorenzo's sensitivity. He plays the part with complete understanding.

The background music which Mario Nascimbene provides lends depth. The strings of the zither stress the various moods.

HELENE WINSTON, charming comedienne, appears in Sailor, Beware! Red Barn Theatre's production at Jackson's Point, July 17th through 21st.

HAMILTON FIRST

"El Cid" At The Century

Samuel Bronston's greatest film presentation, "El Cid" starring Charlton Heston and Sophia Loren, can now be seen at the Century Theatre, Hamilton.

Since 1958, Mr. Bronston has cherished the idea of bringing to the screen the inspiring story of El Cid, the legendary 11th Century warrior-hero whose sword helped create a nation which then had no name and whose heart saw glimmers in the darkness of the medieval world of modern concepts of nationhood, peace and understanding.

Bronston's interest in El Cid was further abetted by the fact that he had just formed his own film company in Madrid and was absorbed by the colorful past and tradition of the Spanish people. No story of Spain's ancient glory would be complete without recounting the exciting exploits of El Cid.

As a movie-maker, Bronston also saw the deeply moving story of a man — part soldier, part visionary, part adventurer, part romantic hero — who brought new feelings of kinship between two mortal enemies: the Christian kings whose beleaguered kingdoms occupied the north, and the Moorish Emirs, who had established in the south over a period of several centuries communities of advanced arts, sciences and culture.

El Cid was a warrior who dreamed of peace; his was an emergence of the modern man in the dark ages.

Moreover he was as romantic a figure as ever caught the imagination of man. His everlasting love for Lady Chimene, fiery Castilian beauty, has been immortalized down through the ages in countless poems, ballads, stories and plays. It remained for Samuel Bronston in association with Dear Film Productions, to add a cinematographic portrait to this impressive gallery.

At the suggestion of Philip Jordan, creative head of the Bronston story department, Academy Award-winning writer Frederic M. Frank was brought to Madrid to research and write a vital story about this fabulous figure.

Creative co-partner in the extensive preparations for "El Cid" was the American director, Anthony Mann, producer Samuel Bronston's first and only choice to mount the lavish Super Technirama production.

Many of the eleven century castles and cathedrals which have stood, virtually untouched by time, in the remote provinces were used. During July, August and September, Mann and associate producer Michael Wasyznski travelled more than 3500 miles over back-country roads to locate the real-life castle backgrounds. Many of them date back to the time of El Cid and even earlier.

The entire supervision of art direction — including the design of all costumes, props and settings — was assigned to the Italian firm of Colasanti & Moore, creators of many lavish operatic productions and such films as "Trapeze", "A Farewell to Arms" and "The Last Days of Pompeii".

Customs and dress of the early Spanish Moors presented difficulties. With the exception of some of the architecture and folk music, virtually every trace of Moorish culture was eradicated from Spain during the reign of Ferdinand and Isabella. Fortunately Colasanti and Moore were able to find almost unlimited material about Moorish customs and costumes in the museums of Sicily, which remained a Moslem stronghold until the 16th Century.

More than 10,000 new costumes were created for "El Cid", including more than 700 dazzling garments of rich velvets and brocades made for the stars and supporting players by the Italian firm of Peruzzi and Cerrattilli; richly bejewelled crowns; rings and scepters made by the craftsmen of Florence and Turin for the rulers of Castile and Aragon.

From his first reading of the screenplay, director Mann wanted only Charlton Heston as El Cid. Heston was so pleased with the role that he arrived in Madrid two months before the start of production. Sophia Loren was signed to portray the sweetheart and wife of El Cid. Her arrival in Madrid was a world-wide news event.

In the ensuing weeks, the cast became composed of Raf Vallone, Genevieve Page, John Fraser, Gary Raymond, Hurd Hatfield, Massimo Serato, Frank Thring, Michael Horner, Andrew Cruickshank, Douglas Wilmer, Tullio Carmanti and Herbert Lom.

With the signing of the Academy Award-winning director of cinematography, Robert Krasker, Mann's production team was completed. Krasker, who won his Oscar for "The Third Man", brought to the film the masterful sense of pageantry which characterized his productions, "Henry V", "Trapeze", "Alexander the Great".

Motion picture equipment, costumes and props arrived from the United States, England and Italy. For two months, an art staff of 36 men and women painted more than 2500 heraldic banners, Moorish flags and medieval religious tapestries, as well as the authentic ornamentation of the battle shields of Castilian, Leonese and Aragonese knights of the period of El Cid.

One difficult problem was the search for a white stallion to portray Babieca, the legendary charger of El Cid. After a three-month survey tour of Yugoslavia, France, Italy and Spain, second-unit director Yvonne Canutt located two beautiful white Arabian steeds in Portugal.

Physical conditioning for Heston and the other male principals took place each morning under the supervision of Maestro Enzo Musumeci Greco, one of Europe's leading fencing masters. Heston, already lean and muscular, trimmed off 12 lbs. during this rugged six weeks program.

In addition to providing employment for more than 12,000 Spaniards, the news of each day's shooting was reported almost religiously in the principal papers of Spain.

Since its New York Premiere at the Warner Theatre on December 14th, "El Cid" has been named "one of the ten best movies of the year" by hundreds of publications including the New York Times, N.Y. Mirror and Time Magazine. Among other honors, it has received the Bell Ringer Award from Scholastic Magazine and an A1 rating from the Legion of Decency.

— THEATRE HIGHLIGHTS —

The Red Barn Theatre at Jackson's Point presents a treat next week in the lovely comedienne, Helene Winston. Miss Winston will play the star role of mother-in-law Horne in the King and Cary farce, Sailor, Beware! She will lead the company in a romp through a fantastic play about sailors and girls, a wedding, a hen-pecked husband, and the most fearsome mother-in-law problem ever encountered.

Like Topsy, Helene's popularity grows and grows and grows. She has won the Liberty Magazine TV award as Best Character Actress of the year, has been named most outstanding newcomer to TV by the Canadian Council of Authors and Artists (1956), and distinguished herself in two seasons at Stratford.

This week, through the 14th, finds Bob Newhart at the O'Keefe Centre. Bob is a comedy writer who enacts his works himself. His famous "Button-Down Mind of Bob Newhart" is at the top of the nation's best-seller charts.

Raised and educated in Chicago, he attended St. Ignace High School and Loyola University there, graduating in 1952 as a Bachelor of Science major. His TV show proved to be one of that medium's most touted comedy ventures of the year, culminating with his being a recipient of a Peabody award and an Emmy.

RECIPE OF THE WEEK

Bluefish are usually plentiful during the summer. For those who like fish, but prefer another method than frying or the usual baked fish, here is a recipe by which bluefish may be "oven poached".

POACHED BLUEFISH

3- to 5-lb. bluefish

1 onion, sliced thin
 1 tomato, sliced thin
 1/2 cup dry white wine
 1/2 teaspoon thyme
 1/4 teaspoon pepper
 1/4 teaspoon salt
 1/2 cup sour cream

Place the onion and tomato slices in a baking pan. Lay the cleaned fish on the vegetables, add wine, thyme, salt and pepper. Cover the pan with foil.

Bake at moderately hot, 400 degrees, for 45 to 50 minutes. Remove foil and carefully lift the fish to a serving platter. Add sour cream to the pan drippings, and serve this as a sauce for the fish. Eight portions.

HI, SUMMER

By RUTHIE

Well, summer's officially here — most of the kinder-lach (little children) are off to camp. I say "most" because mine, for a change, have decided to stay home. After five seasons of camping, they insist they've had it. Anne has a part time job at a department store, Freddie's working in a supermarket, Janie and Heather are on my neck.

To think that I complained of boredom last year! People have it too good. If this week is an indication of what's to follow, I'll be heading for a mental institution.

Eight in the morning, breakfast; nine, breakfast; ten, breakfast; eleven, breakfast. Each gets up at his own inclination. If I so much as utter one peep, I get,

"But, Mommy, it's my vacation. I don't have to get up early."

Twelve, lunch; one, lunch; two, lunch; three, lunch. At five, dinner; six, dinner; seven, dinner. On top of all that, I have to find ways of entertaining Janie and Heather. Their friends are away.

Then my smart husband has the colossal gall to tell me to stop complaining. I never had it so easy.

I vow: my kids will go to camp till they get married.

It seems as though there is an opposite view to every manner of thought. My sister, for instance, holds onto her tzitzit (litteral translation: toy) for dear life. Wherever she goes, Judy goes.

This year Judy, at twelve, was able to persuade her mother to let her go to camp.

"You treat me like a baby. All my friends are away. I can take care of myself. You don't trust me. I won't die of hunger if you're not with me."

"After all," I chided my sister, "you have to start cutting the apron strings sometime. You want an anchor around your neck?"

The first few days after her decision weren't so bad. She was too busy to worry. Of course, there were other problems.

"Shall I buy 'good' clothes or 'junk'? If I buy 'good' stuff and they get lost in the laundry, I'll be mad. If I get 'junk', everything may shrink in the laundry."

"Where shall I stitch the name tapes? On the collars of the blouses? They'll itch. On the tail? They may not be noticed. On the heel of the sock? They may be uncomfortable. On the cuff? They'll show."

Such troubles I should have!

Finally G-Day (Going-Day) arrived. Were there tears? Ha, you just don't know my sister. She and her husband took Judy up there. How they tore themselves away I'll never know.

The day after found my sister walking listlessly from room to room.

"I wonder how she slept. I hope she wasn't forced to drink milk for breakfast; she gags. I hope she had sense to wear a sweater in the morning; it's usually cool. I forgot to tell her not to swim too far out. Did she go to the bathroom?"

The second day she received a card — not a letter, mind you.

"Dear Mom and Dad,

Bring me three giant boxes of potato chips, two boxes of milk chocolate, five boxes of parve (eaten with dairy or meat) chocolate, two boxes of pop corn, plums, grapes, cherries. Send me ten dollars to have till visiting day for pop, ice cream, stuff. And I don't have enough shorts — only twenty. The other kids have more. Oh, yes, and send me wool and knitting needles. The girls are making keepahs (skull-caps) for the boys.

If I forgot anything, I'll let you know.

Love,
 Judy.

P.S. Send the money 'special Delivery'.

My counsellor says I should write I'm fine."

On the third day, the doorbell rang at seven in the morning. There was a commotion outside as though the house were on fire.

My sister and brother-in-law ran, half-asleep. Who should stand there? Judy, in tears.

"I woke up in the middle of the night and felt lonesome. So I made the man who drives the milk truck take me home."

"What!" my sister shrieked. "Counting your clothes, it cost me $800, and you're not going to spoil my summer!"

Now the whole family is at camp. My sister took a cottage five miles away and everybody is happy.

SABLE ANNOUNCES

New Group To Aid Home For The Aged

With less than $900,000 to be raised the Jewish Home for the Aged and Baycrest Hospital Building Expansion Fund is forming a new division to help take the campaign over the top.

Samuel J. Sable, campaign vice-chairman announced that a B'nai B'rith Division is being formed under the leadership of Harry Frank.

Mr. Frank, chairman of the B'nai B'rith Co-ordinating Committee, has called an organizational meeting of the new division on July 18 at the Board Room of the New Mount Sinai Hospital.

A successful meeting of campaign workers was held on Tuesday July 10 at the Primrose Club. Those attending the meeting were told of the Blitz Day for the campaign to be held later in July.

The Campaign Executive report they are proud to receive a gift of $3.27 from Ellen Joy Buchman, 9 of Elm Ridge Dr. who earned it by putting on "little plays and singing performances" for her friends.

Ellen reports she was assisted by Anne Wolfe, 7, and refreshments were provided and sold by Robbie Wolfe, 9 and Sandy Buchman, 6 and Marlene Fine was announcer.

At the last meeting of the Campaign Executive, Campaign Co-Chairmen J. Irving Oelbaum and Abe Poslons called on all workers to devote as much time as possible to getting their cards covered.

They pointed out that success is in sight and can only be achieved if every worker does his share.

Mr. Oelbaum reminded the campaign workers and the community that a commitment was made when the first sold for the new building was turned on June 25 and the $5,000,000 must be raised to fulfill this commitment.

LAND OF HOPE A CANADIAN JEWISH NOVEL

By CLARA HOFFER & F. H. KAHAN

Chapter 9
WEDDING WITHOUT FLOWERS

Life was bright now, Clara thought happily, as she sat beside Israel in the old buggy. It had only one seat, and its covers were torn, and the wheels wobbled so that Clara expected them to roll off the hub any minute. And when they drove through a small slough it tipped dangerously so that she was sure she was going to slide into the muddy water.

But the day was warm, and the breeze was gentle, and Israel was beside her, and there was nothing more she wanted.

It had been so easy, she thought smilingly. Israel had stood in front of her father and said, "We are going to be married."

Clara had stood tauntly beside him, expecting her father to explode with anger. But instead he sadly stroked his red beard and, bracing himself as before an ordeal, offered his hand to Israel.

"In God's name," said Mr. Schwartz, "you have our blessing. One cannot go against what God has ordained. In my time a man asked the father for his daughter's hand. Now they fall in love."

Israel had helped the Schwartzes finish their buildings and move into their home-stand. And now they were on the way to Estevan to buy their licence. Israel gave her seventy-five dollars.

"That's to buy something you would like for yourself, something new. I had hoped to have more money to help your folks with the wedding expenses. I had also intended to fix up our home so that it wouldn't look so much like a bachelor's."

Luckily they met Rabbi Berner in Estevan, saving them the long ride to Hirsch. He was very jovial. He beamed at Israel's request. "Will I?" he asked in return. "You could not keep me from it with chains. But you understand, I wouldn't like to make that trip alone. You must come and get me and take me back home."

Clara moved back into the Hoffer home and started working on her trousseau. When not cooking for the three men and looking after the household, she bent over an old sewing machine Israel had borrowed from Mrs. Victor Black, the wife of another Jewish pioneer who had settled that summer. Stopping often to study the instructions with the help of a dictionary and to have Israel repair, clean and oil the machine, she managed to make two dresses. She had made her wedding dress out of light blue sheer wool she had bought in Estevan; she couldn't get white sheer wool and she didn't like white satin. She also made a navy afternoon dress. The sewing took her three weeks.

The wedding was to take place at the Hoffers. The Schwartzes lived six miles east of the boys' homestead, on the fringe of the colony and too far from most of the families. As soon as Mayer came back with Rabbi Berner, one of the neighbors who was known as "Mayerel" brought an ox to be butchered. All the Jewish settlers had promised him they would take some meat, and meat was most important for the wedding feast.

No sooner had the homesteaders and their wives arrived to get their share when pandemonium broke loose. Mrs. Simon clasped her hands to her head and broke out in loud lamentations. "It's one of his old oxen," she wailed. "Unless we grow new teeth, we can't eat it. It's not even fit for our dogs."

Mayerel begged her to stop. "You are spoiling my sales. Tell me, what could I do? I have to support a family of five and with a long winter ahead. I wanted to sell him because he was too old and to me he was useless, too lazy to work."

"Why did you buy him?" Mr. Simon asked.

"Because I didn't look to see if he had any teeth. I am only asking seven cents a pound. What more do you want of me?"

Luckily for Mayerel, even the meat of an old ox looked good to the hungry colonists. Every scrap was taken off his hands.

The day of the wedding, November 30, 1909, was clear; not a cloud marred the sky. Rabbi Berner, Mr. Schwartz and Reb Moshe sat around discussing the ups and downs of a homesteader's life, while Israel and Mayer were out doing the chores. They also discussed the politics in the new country. Imagine a land where one could vote for their choice of a leader. This was new to the people who were accustomed to having leaders reigning over them from their cradle days.

Clara left the kitchen after scrubbing the floor, and went into the bedroom, pulling the curtains together. Working with quick nervous movements, she let her braids down to fashion a new hair-do as suited a bride. Her thick long hair hung warmly about her slender shoulders. She ran the comb over it with one hand and held the mirror with the other. Whatever style she tried however, did nothing for her. Her face was too plain, her nose too straight, her chin too weak. She would have to be satisfied with pulling her hair into a knot at the nape of her neck, which Israel had said was becoming to her.

She began putting on her veil. She should have some flowers, she sighed. What is a wedding without flowers?

"They are coming!" her mother called. "Get ready!"

"I am ready, mama. Come in please. I want you to see me."

The house began filling up with guests. Mrs. Black and Mrs. Lyman peered brightly through the curtains. Clara turned to them, one hand still on the veil.

"Wait," carolled Mrs. Black, coming in flushed and excited. "I will fix it just the way it should be."

Quickly she adjusted the

THE ARTS IN ISRAEL

By AURA HERZOG

In the course of the discussion about Chagall's windows, which were recently installed in the synagogue of the new Hadassah Medical Centre, there was considerable comment on the evident lack of "Jewishness" in the works of Israel's younger generation of artists. Can one discern a Jewish leitmotif in any of the paintings exhibited by the younger set of late years? One name comes to mind. A little over a year ago there was a very interesting exhibition at the Tel Aviv Museum by one who might be called a "Jewish symbolist" — Naftali Bezem. Bezem's most moving "Book of Laments" has recently been published and his deeply Jewish drawings are arousing much interest.

The drawings are not illustration of a text. The book was created the other way around. Bezem drew feverishly while listening on his radio to the Eichmann trial. From scores of drawings thirteen were chosen for the book, and the writer and critic, Ezra Zussman, was commissioned to write an accompanying text.

Here, in black and white, you feel the sufferings of German-born Bezem, his grief at losing his loved ones, and his wish to give them a fitting burial . . . at least with ink. This is a catharsis of an anguished soul, and throughout you find the deeply devout Jew. This gifted artist is the product of his early environment, an exemplary Jewish home — and he knows it. His life story, he says, is similar to the one described by Andre Schwartz, Bart in "The Last of the Just". Bezem left behind by the artist differs in the closing chapters, for, thanks to Youth Aliyah, he was rescued. He arrived in Palestine at the age of fourteen, studied at the Bezalel School of Arts in Jerusalem, served in the Palmach and the Israeli Army, engaged in further study in Paris, exhibited at the Venice Biennale, won the Dizengoff Prize (Israel's premier art award) in 1957 and taught at the Bezalel School.

Naftali Bezem cannot free himself from his sad experiences and his works are permeated with them. His subjects: "The Last Supper" (an angel hovers above the knives and forks left in haste); "The Sabbath," painted in sombre colours of twilight and candlelight, Jews in grey and black tightly grouped together and above them a translucent symbol in the softest blue and green — is it prayer or hope? "The Return to the Homeland."

When Bezem visits Spain he goes to his easel and depicts the persecuted Jews as a background to the red bull. "Menoro" subconsciously shape out like half angels with feminine face, the fish, the lion of Judah — they are all there.

As I search I discover that there is a versatile Bezem. In his first book, "Flowers of the Sun," he strikes a happy note: it is a hymn of praise to the wonder of creation. Particularly moving is a drawing in which the newborn child is lifted from the symbol of a woman by a pair of hands. In his home there hangs a very charming ten-year-old oil painting in cheerful yellows, greens and brown, which is a picture of a ma'abara, an immigrant transitional camp, no longer in existence. This is the Bezem left behind by the artist in search of a more profound meaning, by the symbolist.

Hamilton's Sylvia Katz

By SYLVIA MORRIS

The Adas Israel Congregation in Hamilton is fortunate in having Mrs. Sylvia Katz as president of Sisterhood. Toronto born and educated, Mrs. Katz, who is the former Miss Shecter, was at one time secretary to Mr. J. I. Oelbaum, well known Toronto Zionist leader. After marrying Nate Katz of Hamilton in 1940, she came here to live.

Money is going to be hard to get now. That's the opinion of Bernie Greenbaum, and he should know. When was it easy to get? That's my opinion, and I should know!

What a summer this is turning into. First it was tight pants and now it's tight money. I don't mind Ottawa's having to go out and borrow a billion dollars, but what DOES worry me is that I think they put me down as a co-signer!

The whole deal was a big disappointment to Jack Waxman. He figured he and his cohorts in Binkley Investments could have handled the whole deal right here. "Why go to the International Monetary Fund and make such a tizzy with us?" He said — "It all would have been on a strictly confidential basis!"

Maybe next time, boys. And here's a funnier one yet. Dog Mervin. The way things are going, it's liable to be wieners for the whole year!

The following story differs from the callousness characteristic of the news these days: Twenty-three pre-school-age children and their parents started classes at a clinic organized by the Hamilton and District Association for Deaf and Hard of Hearing. The program is the first of its kind in Canada. The children and parents will be given speech training, lessons in lip reading and language understanding. It's a special summer course organized for out-of-towners and follows a successful regu-

DATLINE. HAMILTON

AS I SEE IT

By PAUL HANOVER

And it was largely through their efforts that today Hamilton can boast of this course for deaf and hard of hearing tots. A course, first of its kind in Canada!

It was Mrs. Harry Hoffman of Toronto (remember her as Goldie Silver?) who passed along a flattering message about how this column is enjoyed by her brother, Harry Silver, in Peterborough. I guess it's the nostalgic bit. After all, Harry was Hamilton through and through, until he went Air Force early in the war. I remember him as advisor to an independent boys' club where some of us devoted our teen years. Young Sons of Israel we called it. Norma Rain was our secretary and designed our crest. I was social chairman mainly because my brother-in-law, Sam Wolfson, let me borrow his wind-up victrola — a portable job, yet. Those dances were held every Saturday night at the Vine Street Centre. And believe me, from the way some of those dances went, we should have guessed what purpose that same building would someday serve! We even had a Tiffin Club. And if you want a laugh, someday ask Harry Silver about the meeting we had where Dr. Paikin was guest speaker to discuss sex. I was practically the only one asking questions, which really gassed all the other guys since, at that time, I was taking out Harry's sister. I don't know why I keep calling him Harry when you probably know him as Hush. See, I just thought of something. Since he's now in the shoe business, maybe it was all his gimmick. I mean... like... HUSH PUPPIES??

I had to admire the practical use Goldie Hoffman found for the violin she used to murder in her music-studying days. It's a lovely lamp in the living room. Now, if somebody will play me a chorus of "Shine Like Glow Worm, Glimmer, Glimmer," I'll pull out the plug for this week.

Guelph holds important meeting for the UJA

Guelph, (CJN) S. Robert Abrahami, Canada Representative of the Rasseo Israel Corporation, was the guest speaker at the campaign meeting in Guelph held on Thursday, June 14th under the chairmanship of Dr. Simon Witt. Mr. Abrahami in a very stirring address explained the necessity for a 25% increase in this year's campaign endeavors throughout the country. Liban, Executive Director, Zionist Organization of Canada, Central Division.

Z.O.C. Holds Meeting

Kingston, Ont. (CJN) — Under the auspices of the Agnes Etherington Art Centre and the Kingston Jewish Community Council, and co-sponsored by the Zionist Organization of Canada, Central Division, an Israel Art Exhibit was opened on Tuesday, June 12th, 1962. Mr. Sheldon Cohen, President of the Kingston Jewish Community Council, first presented Mr. Andre Bieler, resident artist, to the audience and Mr. Bieler gave an explanation of the paintings represented in this exhibition.

Subsequently, Dr. George J. Liban, Executive Director, Zionist Organization of Canada, Central Division, officially opened the exhibit and expressed his thanks to the Kingston Art Centre and the Kingston Jewish Community Council for their co-operation in making this exhibit possible.

Dr. Liban also expressed the thanks of his Organization to Mr. and Mrs. Sam Zacks of Toronto who have lent 22 pictures from their collection to this display. The exhibition was very favourably reviewed and it was stated that it creates a feeling of excitement for the further development of art in Israel.

Prior to the opening, Prof. Andre Bieler and Dr. George J. Liban participated in a half hour T. V. interview on the local T.V. programme "AL-MANAC" in which both gentlemen explained and described paintings of this exhibition. The opening was concluded with a reception for approximately 200 guests present. Conveners were Mrs. Frances Smith of the Etherington Art Centre and Mrs. Sheldon Cohen of the London Jewish Community Council. Pouring were: Mrs. Karpol Bender and Mrs. Andre Bieler.

AMERICAN ISRAELI GROUP TO CO-OPERATE IN INVESTMENT TRUSTS

Washington, (JCN) Steps to establish an "open-end investment trust specializing in Israeli securities" are being taken in Israel and the U.S. according to "Foreign Commerce Weekly", the official organ of the U.S. Department of Commerce.

A Boston group, headed by Mr. Lawrence Laskey, is forming a $36,000,000 trust for the purpose. An Israeli banker, specializing in securities trade, whose name has not yet been disclosed, will be the exclusive representative in Israel.

HUNGARY HONORS PHYSICIANS

Budapest, (JCNS) — Four Jewish physicians have been appointed to the new Hungarian Extension Training Institute for Medicine at the Szabolcs-Street Hospital, it was learned here last week. They are: Dr. Bela Molnar, Kossuth-prize laureate, as head surgeon; Dr. Pal Weinstein, as head oculist; Dr. Jeno Rakonitz, as chief nerve specialist; and Dr. Jeno Barsony, as chief gynecologist.

The first two physicians are honorary members of the Budapest Jewish Community's Council Board, and the other two are regular members of the Board.

It was also learnt that on the occasion of the Hungarian Book week, last week, Andre Schwartz-Bart's novel "The Last of the Righteous" was published here. Also published was the latest book by Mr. Endre Sos, the President of the Central Board of Hungarian Jews, entitled "Testimony." It deals with various aspects of the Jewish question in the form of essays and articles.

NO OFFICIAL COMMENT
 In Algiers the leaders of the government made no official statement about Israel's gesture of recognition. A spokesman for Prime Minister Ben Youssef Benkhedda hinted that at this moment, when the Government is faced by the dissension of the Ben Bella faction, it would be "unwise" to make any comment.

NO DISTURBANCES
 Reports from Algeria indicate that despite several acts of brutality and some murders committed by Ben Bella supporters last week, the Algerian people in general are entering their era of independence without the slightest violence or even a trace of xenophobia. Last week's antisemitic outbreaks in some towns were only isolated incidents.

Some Algerians said that they were caused by provocateurs who would like to start a new conflict between the Jewish population and the Moslems.

NO "DIKTAT" FROM NASSER
 Colonel Boualen, the second-in-command of the Algiers district, made a statement about Israel and Algeria. He said: "While I cannot express an official view one can take it for granted that the problem of possible ties with Israel will be strictly on the basis of the social and economic interests of Algeria and cannot be dictated by any foreign interests." He dismissed as "absurd" Ben Bella's alleged plan for Algerian participation in any Egyptian adventures against Israel.

CJN REPORT
NORTH AFRICANS AND FRANCE

(THIS IS THE FIRST OF TWO ARTICLES BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT WHO HAS JUST RETURNED FROM A VISIT TO ALGERIA AND MARSEILLES.)

Paris, (CJN - JCNS) — Early every morning, empty, the planes rise up to ride southward across the Mediterranean. By noon, crammed full, they begin to circle again over the great blue-green marshes that edge Marseilles' Marignac airport, bearing back to France Frenchmen streaming out of Algeria, at an astounding rate.

Daily, down by the long Joliette quays, five and six steamships and converted freighters pull in, disgorging herds of tired, harassed-looking men, women, and children (but, so far, mostly women and children) who have left Oran and Algiers, Blida and Bone, Mostaganem and Constantine, fleeing cities and countryside. There, since 1830, France had planted her "colon" and culture which, until a short year ago, she still claimed as her integral own — and now due to become an independent, Moslem-dominated state.

1,000 A DAY
 Among the repatriates are many Jews. How many? Nobody knows, one can only guess. For they come as Frenchmen, with no distinction of any kind made on arrival. Usually, repatriates quickly disappear for the most part from docks and airports. Impressions formed by Jewish welfare workers welcoming newcomers, fragmented reports from the repatriates themselves about the melting away of Jewish communities in one Algerian town after another, the occasional ruffling through names on a shipping manifest or police entry cards: such is the stuff on which are based estimates of the exodus of Jews from Algeria. They vary widely. According to a reasonable evaluation, about 50,000 Jews have left Algeria since last Autumn, and another 800 to 1,000 and more a day are still coming in, mostly through Marseilles.

The Jews leaving Algeria comes not as a Jew but as a Frenchman, considering himself as such and being so considered. The distinction is important, essential. Legally a French citizen since the Clemieux decree of 1870, seeing in French culture the key to social status, psychologically bound to France despite the oft-voiced antisemitism of the "colon" dominated society around him, the effect of seven long years of war and the very real threat that he might lose his Frenchness with Algerian independence, was to tie him closer to France than ever.

And when he gets off at Orly airport outside Paris, or at Lyon, or Bordeaux, or off the ship at Port Vendres or Marseilles, that's just how he is treated — like any other Frenchman.

FEW GO TO ISRAEL
 This is the reason why so few Algerian Jews go to Israel. They feel sympathetic towards Israel, certainly, and wish it well. The number of those who have elected to go to Israel during the past few months has risen. Such emigration, however, was always puny relative to other North African lands and Algerian potential, despite all the efforts of special missions. Presently, it is but a drop in the bucket compared to Jewish movement to France.

"But I am French, monsieur," the response will come, not unoften in outraged tones when Jewish Agency representatives query newcomers as to whether they plan to go to Israel. "There is another reason, too," affirmed a young carpentry foreman from Blida, precisely the kind of person Israel seeks. "I've just stepped out of a land where we were surrounded by Mosthem over the years as pro-French "collaborators" would be so easily forgotten, or that resentment over their identification with the French would be so readily passed over, regardless of what the Evian accords might say. Others, more optimistic at first, veered to the same opinion following the Ben Bella declaration in Cairo (later denied by F.L.N. spokesmen after a twelve day lapse) that one of the first tasks of independent Algeria would be to send 100,000 men to fight Israel, and "Zionism". The most recent declaration by F.L.N. representative in New York, Abdel Kadir Chanderli will doubtless have a like effect, even though never published in Algeria.

Jews have been leaving Algeria over the years. From 1956 to the Autumn of 1961, according to a sociological study recently completed by Community Service, some 100,000 Jews have gone from the North African littoral to France, with roughly a third of these being from Algeria, or an average of five to six thousand a year. Demographic increase in Algeria, however, probably kept the Jewish community there pretty much constant during that time, at about 120-130,000.

Montrealer Honored
 A Montreal business and community leader, Joseph Berman, has made possible the erection of an Exhibition Hall on the campus of The Hebrew University in Jerusalem, Israel. News of the munificent gift was made last week by Michael Greenblatt, Q.C., National Chairman of the Endowment and Bequest Committee of the Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University and Bernard M. Bloomfield, President of the Montreal Chapter of the Organization.

Contributed by Mr. and Mrs. Berman, the gift will allow for the establishment of the Exhibition Hall in the Jewish National and University Library, the central building on the Hebrew University's new Jerusalem campus, in memory of their son Norman and their grandchildren who were tragically killed in an accident one year ago.
